The chief of the general staff in the Danubian army and the man who will actually lead and command the Russian forces is a Pole, General Nepokoytchizky's origin has for a long time been a hindrance to his promotion, but his abilities are too great not to be ultimately acknowledged. He was, during the war of 1853-54, chief of staff in the Fifth Army Corps, commanded by General Inders. He was the leading spirit in all the operations on the Danube during that war, and has now the incalculable advantage of operating on a field perfectly familiar to him. He has picked out for brigadiers and division generals men who served under him twenty-four years ago as captains and majors, and who, accordingly, know the Danubian region just as well as he does.

and the firemen themselves were hard pressed; however, they stuck to their places, obeying every order. By half-past five the roof of the main building had fallen in and the entire side of the extension behind having burned out the south wall, about fifty feet in height and eighty feet long, tottered and fell outward with a rumbling noise. A portion of the wall fell upon, cut off and crushed exactly one-half of a double tenement house facing on St. Urbain street from which the inmates had a few moments before providentially escaped. The fall of this wall left the main building a crumbling wreck, about ten minutes past six, a portion of the rear of the north wall came crashing down and buried three firemen named Reddy, Nolan and Holby, their comrades and several fearless civilians rushed into the alley of death to their rescue, regardless of the fact that the lofty and tottering wall was even then quivering before the final destruction, while working with superhuman efforts to save their fellow beings, the remainder of the wall came down, tons upon tons of the bricks and mortar fell with resistless force. The effect was dreadful. Where a moment before had been a party of stalwart men, busily engaged, was now to the spectator nothing more than a smoking waste of brick and charred wood. The excitement of the spectators now grew to frenzy. The rescuers set to work pitching back the scalding hot bricks, regardless of the burns they received, and the work went on systematically.

It was a sickening spectacle, the disinterment of one corpse after another, while the groans of the wounded and dying were heartrending. Nolan could be heard calling for help, and with much difficulty he was reached. One after the other, the dead and wounded were removed till all had been recovered. The dead were placed in coffins saved from the coffin shop, and the living were taken to the Hospital.

The list of those who perished is as follows—

THE KILLED.

T. Higgins, Richard Scholes, Michael Barry, Wm. Perry and Geo. Lynch, firemen; Mr. Beauchamp, Antoine Sanders, John Hamel, Joseph Parker, and Pierre Camille, civilians.

The total number who perished was ten.

THE WOUNDED.

In addition the following were injured more or less severely:—Chief Patton, severe scalp wounds and a large gash on the right temple, very much bruised and burned.

J. Nolan, legs badly fractured, one broken, and bruised about the head.

John Livingstone, one leg badly smashed, since amputated.

Ben Harrison, back broken, still living.

Chas. Reddy, Skinner, head bruised.

A. Ferguson, leg broken and head bruised.

Chas. Beance, Skinner, badly hurt.

Alfred Holby, burnt badly about the hands and face.

Israel Bishop, leg broken and badly burned.

Edward Foley, one leg broken, and badly burned about the head.

Besides the above many civilians were badly injured and carried to the homes by their friends. The firemen were all taken to the hospital, except those killed, the latter being taken to their homes.

MONTREAL, May 1.—John Livingstone, who had his leg amputated on account of injuries received at the fire, died from exhaustion six o'clock this morning. He leaves a wife and three children. Ferguson, the housemaker, died in the General Hospital this afternoon. This makes the seventh death in the brigade. The others are progressing favourably.

RUSSIA AND TURKEY.

to defend our interests if they were attacked, and meanwhile we maintained the strictest neutrality. We cannot do better than follow the precedent we then set ourselves. Our interests in Turkey are manifold and great, but it would be easy to exaggerate them so long as the war keeps within certain limits, and at present they cannot be compared in importance to those of Austria. No doubt the war might, both in Europe and Asia, roll to points of greater importance to us than to any other State, just the war of 1870 might have rolled to Antwerp; but we have precisely the same security now as we had then in the self-interest of the principal combatant. Russia, whatever be her faults, has, at least, a peculiar keen sense of her own interests. To presume she would absolutely court a collision with the greatest naval Power in the world is to presume she would suddenly become as infatuated as Turkey. It is sometimes assumed that Constantinople might be taken by a dashing attack; but in reality, it is one of the strongest places in the world. The Turks might, so long as they command the sea, hold it single-handed, and perhaps, the knowledge of this fact adds emphasis to Russia's declaration that she will not besiege Constantinople. At all events, it sufficiently rebukes the cries of undignified alarm and undisguised appeals to ignorant passion. This country can afford to regard the present contest calmly, for the simple reason that it will be perfectly well able to defend its interest if, and when, they are attacked.

In the House of Commons Mr. Gladstone gave notice that he should introduce five resolutions. They declare that England has a just cause of complaint at the conduct of the Porte; that until there is a change of conduct and guarantees are given the Porte has no claim to the support of the British Crown; that in the midst of the complications, and with war actually begun, the House earnestly desires that the influence of England in the councils of Europe be employed for the effectual development of liberty and local self-government in the disturbed provinces; that the House further desires that the influence of England be addressed to the promotion of harmonious action among the European Powers.

We expect all past due accounts to be settled up. DAVIS & BRO.

PRECAUTIONS AGAINST HOTEL FIRES.

The Illinois Legislature has had submitted to it a Bill providing that the owners and proprietors of hotels of two stories in height and upward, in that State, shall keep rope ladders, made of good material, in each and every sleeping-room in their houses above the ground floors, of sufficient length, when one end is securely fastened to the floor or walls, to reach the ground when the other end is thrown out of the window.

The Cincinnati Gazette, makes the following excellent suggestion:—One of the best appendages to lofty buildings are the iron staircases fastened to the outside of so many hotels and large tenement houses in New York. They run from the top of the building to the second story, being directly accessible from each story that they pass. They terminate near enough to the ground to be within reach of short ladders, and yet are so high that burglars cannot readily get upon them. Had the Southern Hotel been provided with such apparatus, many less lives would have been lost. The ladders need not be unsightly, as they can be easily be made in fancy patterns, that would add to rather than diminish the architectural effect of the structure to which they are attached. But beauty is a secondary consideration when the lives of hundreds are at stake.

Walters near Tamworth, died March 17th, aged 37, was taken from the vault at Clark's Mills, Saturday April 28th ult., brought to Tamworth, and buried at the English church. The proceedings were conducted according to the Orange Orders.

IN MEMORIAM.

The following lines were composed with reference to the late child of James Aylsworth, Esq., Tamworth, who died Thursday night the 26th ult. aged 17 months 24 days and was buried at Mervin on Saturday.

CLEAR.

Within a cradle downy
A lovely baby slept;
While in his soft sweet slumber,
Their watch, the parents kept;
They gazed upon their baby,
In beauty Oh! so fair,
And then thereby they offered,
To God their fervent prayer.

O, thou most gracious Father,
From thy bright throne above;
Look down in mercy ever,
On him the bloom of love;
To us, his earthly parents,
The needed aid bestow,
To teach him for thy glory,
The way that he should go.

We ask not for our loved one,
A pearl and radiant worldlings prize,
But for the lasting treasure
In store above the skies;
Also keep us from making
An idol of this child;
Because how soon we know not,
He'll be by death defied.

CLOUDY.

Alas, this darling baby,
So fair before our eyes
Is like a withering blossom,
Wherein some evil lies;
There lurks within his nature,
A worm of deadly pow'r;
Which will if God prevent not,
Destroy this lovely flower.

The twenty sixth of April, (1877)
This was the dreaded night;
The baby whom so lovely,
From earth then made his flight;
Here his abode was briefly
No longer he could stay;
God's wise design, most strictly
To this must be obey.

MISSING.

We miss thee darling baby,
Wherever we do go;
By day, by night, we miss thee
Thy sad to miss thee so;
We miss thy tongue when prattling,
We miss thy features fair;
Yet heaven to us is cheering,
We will not miss thee there.

Dear friends, this cup is bitter
Your grief, no tongue can tell,
Yet wisely you'll consider
The Lord does all things well
This trial will prove a blessing
Though dark the cloud appear,
By faith look up rejoicing
To heaven, you'll see him there.

Those parents they are happy
Who heartily can say,
Father we bow most humbly
To thy decree we joy,
Our little one is safely
With Thee, from us withdrawn
There is no day of glory
No eve,—no night,—no dawn.

RUSSIA AND TURKEY.
 THE COMMANDERS OF THE HOSTILE
 ARMIES.

Abdul-Kerim Pasha is an unassuming man over seventy years of age, with no pretensions to a brilliant pedigree, but with a solid reputation as an excellent soldier. Abdul-Kerim Pasha's official title is that of Sendar-i-Ekrem, or Commander in Chief, as distinguished from the Minister of War, Redif Pasha. He is however, the senior of the Minister,
 both in age and experience, and Redif Pasha is much under his control. The old soldier was himself Minister of War during the reign of Abdul-Aziz. The name of the old General has not hitherto been special in the outside world, partly on account of his modesty and constant desire to keep in the background, partly because the living military men of Turkey have had only one chance to show their abilities, and that was during the war of 1853-54. But the part played by the French and English during that war was so much more prominent that nobody except the Turks themselves took any interest in what was done by their army.
 Otherwise the name of Abdul-Kerim Pasha would have been much more widely celebrated, as he was one of the most successful of Turkish generals, both on the Danube and in the Crimea.

The Grand Duke Nicholas is fine-looking, tall, forty-six years old, a brother of the Czar, as happily a prince as the House of Romanoff has ever produced, and a soldier as devoid of a military history as any review and parade guardsman. Abdul-Kerim Pasha is the actual commander-in-chief of his army. The Grand Duke Nicholas is a mere figurehead, guided and commanded by his chief of staff, General Nepokoytchizky, the Modiste of Russia. He has been in active service since the age of sixteen, or for thirty years past; but he has had scarcely any field experience. He spent a few days in Sebastopol during the siege, and was, when quite a youth, attached for some two years to the general staff of the Army of the Caucasus, where he took part in a few skirmishes with the Ocherkeses. He was brought up as a field engineer, and is at present he chief of all the military engineers of the empire,
 with General Tolstoben as his assistant.
 The Grand Duke is married to the daughter of Prince Peter of Oldenburg, and has two sons, one of whom, the Grand Duke Nicholas, Jr., a youth of twenty, is with him in the capacity of an aide-de-camp. The Grand Duke is the third son of Czar Nicholas, and is accordingly an uncle of the two princely sailors at present in this country.

The chief of the general staff in the Danubian army and the man who will actually lead and command the Russian forces is a Pole, General Nepokoyt-chizky's origin has for a long time been a hindrance to his promotion, but his abilities are too great not to be ultimately acknowledged. He was, during the war of 1853-4, chief of staff in the Fifth Army Corps, commanded by General Inders.

THE PARIS EXHIBITION

The exhibition of 1878 will supply
 Paris with as complete a system of tramways as that which benefits New York.
 But even these means of transport are considered likely to be insufficient to meet the wants of the enormous crowds who will be moving constantly about the streets of Paris thirteen months hence,
 that an ingenious Frenchman has recently hit upon a novel idea for increasing their number without additional pressure on the public resources. He proposes that all the coach builders of the earth shall be invited to give specimens of their wares in motion, and that they shall be allowed to ply for hire at tariffs to be fixed by themselves as remunerative, and under proper arrangements with the exists cab and omnibus companies who have vested rights; He further suggests that they shall run exclusively on the board highways from the Place de la Bourse to the Trocadero, and from the Palais Royal to the Champ de Mars, so that they may be seen to the fullest advantage, and that competent judges may be able to decide what is the most convenient sort of

ELECTRICITY! THOMAS' EXCELSIOR ELECTRIC OIL!—WORTH TEN TIMES ITS WEIGHT IN GOLD.—PAIN cannot stay
 where it is used. It is the cheapest medicine ever made. One dose cures common sore throat. One bottle has cured bronchitis. Fifty cents' worth has cured an old standing cough. It positively cures catarrh asthma and croup. Fifty cents' worth has cured crick in the back, and the same quantity lame back of eight years' standing.
 The Following are extracts from a few of the many letters that have been received from different parts of Canada, which we think, should be sufficient to satisfy the most sceptical: J. Collard, of Sparta, Ont., writes, "Send me 6 dozen Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil, have sold all I had from you,
 and want more now; it cures are truly wonderful." Wm. McGuire, of Franklin, writes, "I have sold all the agents left, it acts like a charm—it was slow at first, but takes splendid now." H. Cole, of Iona, writes, "Please forward 6 dozen Thomas'
 Electric Oil, I am newly out, nothing equals
 it. It is highly recommended by those who have used it." J. Bedford, Thamesville, writes, "Send at once a further supply of Electric Oil, I have only one bottle left.
 I never saw anything sell so well and give general satisfaction." J. Thompson, Woodford writes, "Send me some more Electric Oil. I have sold entirely out. Nothing takes like it." Miller & Reid, Ulverton, P.
 Q., writes, "The Electric Oil is getting a great reputation here, and is daily called for. Send us a furth - supply without delay."

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.—Ask for Dr.
 Thomas' Electric Oil. See that the signature of S. N THOMAS is on the wrapper, and the name of Northrop and Lyman are blown in the bottle, and "Take no other." Sold by all medicine dealers. Price, 25 cts. NOR-

GREAT R

Minister of War, Redif Pasha. He, however, the senior of the Minister, both in age and experience, and Redif Pasha is much under his control. The old soldier was himself Minister of War during the reign of Abdul-Aziz. The one of the old General has not hitherto seen special in the outside world, partly on account of his modesty and constant desire to keep in the background, partly because the living military men of Turkey have had only one chance to show their abilities and that was during the war of 1853-54. But the part played by the French and English during that war was so much more prominent that nobody except the Turks themselves took any interest in what was done by their army. Otherwise the name of Abdul-Kerim Pasha would have been much more widely celebrated, as he was one of the most successful of Turkish generals, both on the Danube and in the Crimea.

The Grand Duke Nicholas is fine-looking, tall, forty-six years old, a brother of the Czar, as largely a prince as the House of Romanoff has ever produced, and a soldier as devoid of a military history as any review and parade guardsman. Abdul Kerim Pasha is the actual commander-in-chief of his army. The Grand Duke Nicholas is a mere figure-head, guided and commanded by his chief of staff, General Nepokoytchizky, the Motke of Russia. He has been in active service since the age of sixteen, or for thirty years past; but he has had scarcely any field experience. He spent a few days in S. bastion during the siege, and was, when quite a youth, attached for some two years to the general staff of the Army of the Caucasus, where he took part in a few skirmishes with the Cherkeses. He was brought up as a field engineer, and is at present the chief of all the military engineers of the empire, with General Toffchen as his assistant. The Grand Duke is married to the daughter of Prince Peter of Oldenburg, and has two sons, one of whom, the Grand Duke Nicholas, Jr., a youth of twenty, is with him in the capacity of an aide-de-camp. The Grand Duke is the third son of Czar Nicholas, and is accordingly an uncle of the two princely sailors at present in this country.

The chief of the general staff in the Danubian army and the man who will actually lead and command the Russian forces is a Pole. General Nepokoytchizky's origin has for a long time been a hindrance to his promotion, but his abilities are too great not to be ultimately acknowledged. He was, during the war of 1853-4, chief of staff in the Fifth Army Corps, commanded by General Linder. He was the leading spirit in all the operations on the Danube during that war, and has now the incalculable advantage of operating on a field perfectly familiar to him. He has picked out for brigadiers and division generals men who served under him twenty-four years ago as captains and majors, and who, accordingly, knew the Danubian region just as well as he does.

The Russian Army about to operate in Asia Minor against Mukhtar Pasha is under the orders of the Grand Duke Michael, younger brother of the Grand Duke Nicholas, and the Czar's Lord Lieutenant of the Caucasus, a much brighter and more experienced officer than the Commander-in-Chief of the army of the Danube.

A NEEDLESS PANIC.

"THE TIMES" ON THE SITUATION.
The Times in a leading article, depicts needless panic concerning the war, and says:—
"England may have to strengthen her fleet in the Mediterranean and send it nearer the scene of action. During the Franco-German war England had deep and real interests to guard, but the nation displayed no weak or noisy alarm. We assumed that we were perfectly able streets of Paris thirteen months hence, that an ingenious Frenchman has recently hit upon a novel idea for increasing them without additional pressure on the public resources. He proposes that all the coach builders of the earth shall be invited to give specimens of their wares in motion, and that they shall be allowed to ply for hire at tariffs to be fixed by themselves as remunerative, and under proper arrangements with the existing cab and omnibus companies who have vested rights. He further suggests that they shall run extensively on the board highways from the Place de la Bourse to the Trocadero, and from the Palais Royal to the Champ de Mars, so that they may be seen to the fullest advantage, and that competent judges may be able to decide what is the most convenient sort of equipage known to any nation, either for pure or common use. The Exhibition building will be a permanent structure.

THE NORTH-WEST.

In answer to intending settlers, the Winnipeg Free Press says:—"There is a superabundance of book-keepers and that class, also of printers. Farming is the only interest which cannot be overdone. There are good openings for both small and large capitalists.

Bishop Rogers, of the Roman Catholic Diocese in Victoria, preached a sermon denouncing the Free School system of the colony, and proclaiming the policy of opposition to secular schools.

The express rate from St. Paul to Winnipeg has been reduced to $7 per 100 pounds since the opening of navigation.

The miners on strike in the Nanaimo colonies refuse to vacate the companies' houses or obey the Sheriff. The militia and a Government steamer have been sent to arrest them.

James Dominick, of the Red Saloon, Winnipeg, was fined $25 and $7 20 costs for selling liquor to an Indian.

The Winnipeg Free Press commercial, 13th, says:—"The complete break-up of the leading roads has brought business, from the country, to nearly a complete standstill. Wheat, 85 to 93 cents. Oats 50 to 55 cents. Barley, slow sale at 40 cents. Pork very scarcely at 12 1/2 cents; beef inclining upwards, being by the side, 6 to 10 cents, and alive, 5 1/2 cents. Potatoes can scarcely be got rid of in quantities, at 20 cents. Butter very scarce. Dealers pay from 35 to 40 cents, consumers 45 and even 50 cents. Eggs 30 cents. Hay 24 to $10. Coal oil, 82 per gallon.

THE Beautiful and Celebrated Thoroughbred Sire "VILLEY" will stand this season at his owner's stables, Campbell Street, Belleville. For terms, pedigree, and performances, and other particulars, apply to No 24in. JAMES DAVIDSON.

strong cough. It positively cures catarrh asthma and croup. Fifty cents' worth has cured crick in the back, and the same quantity lame back of eight years' standing. The Following are extracts from a few of the many letters that have been received from different parts of Canada, which we think, should be selected to satisfy the most sceptical: J. Collard, of Sparta, Ont., writes, "Send me 6 dozen Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil, have sold all I had from you, and want more now; it cures, are truly wonderful." Wm. McGuire, of Franklin, writes, "I have sold all the agents left, it acts like a charm—it was slow at first, but takes splendid now." H. Cole, of Iona, writes, "Please forward 6 dozen Thomas' Electric Oil, I am newly out, nothing equals it. It is highly recommended by those who have used it." J. Bedford, Thamesville, writes, "Send at once a further supply of Electric Oil, I have only one bottle left. I never saw anything sell so well and give general satisfaction." J. Thompson, Woodford writes, "Send me some more Electric Oil. I have sold entirely out. Nothing takes like it." Miller & Reid, Ulverton, P. Q., writes, "The Electric Oil is getting a great reputation here, and is daily called for. Send us a further supply without delay."

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.—Ask for Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. See that the signature of S. N. THOMAS is on the wrapper, and the names of Northrop and Lyman are blown in the bottle, and "Take no other." CLEAR.
In a cradle downy
The baby slept;
In his soft sweet slumber,
His watch, the parents kept;
Gazed upon their baby,
Said Oh! so fair;
Then thereby they offered,
For their fervent prayer.

A most gracious Father,
In thy bright throne above;
Laid in mercy ever,
In the bloom of love;
His earthly parents,
Needed thy bestow,
Oh him for thy glory,
Way that he should go.

Not for our loved one,
Pearls that worldlings prize,
Or the lasting treasure
Tore above the skies;
Keep us from making
Idol of this child;
Use how soon we know not,
If be by death defiled.

CLOUDY
This darling baby,
Air before our eyes
A withering blossom,
Seem some evil lies;
Lurks within his nature,
Form of deadly power;
Will if God prevent not,
Troy this lovely flower.

Twenty sixth of April, (1877)
It was the dreaded night;
By whom so lovely
In earth then made his flight;
His abode was briefly
Longer he could stay;
Wise design, most strictly
His he must obey.

MISSING.
Is thee darling baby,
Forever we do go;
By night, we miss thee
Sad to miss thee; so;
Is thy tongue when prattling,
Miss thy features fair;
Even to us is cheering,
Will not miss the there.

Friends, this cup is bitter
In grief, no tongue can tell,
Isely you'll consider
Lord does all things well
Which will prove a blessing
Which dark the cloud appear,
Which look up rejoicing
Heaven, you'll see him there.

Parents they are happy
So heartily can say,
For we bow most humbly
By decree we joy,
Title one is safely
Which Thee, from us withdrawn
Is noon-day of glory

MANHOOD: HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED!

WE have recently published a new edition
of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated s-say on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage,
etc., resulting from excesses.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or
two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, of this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequence
may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of
every youth and every man in the land.

MANHOOD: HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED!!

WE have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated s- say on the radical and permanent cure (with- out medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

1st Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, of this admirable Es- say clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' suc- cessful practice, that alarming consequence may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and rad- ically.

2d This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

SHALL WE KILL THE CROWS?

FROM THE CULTIVATOR, AND COUNTRY GENTLEMEN.

Crows appear to be more numerous than usual this winter and spring. The mild winter of 1875-6 favored their increase, while the severity of the past season has driven them to roadways and barnyards to pick up scattering grain. What effect crows may have in regard to farmer's prospects is therefore a more than usually interesting subject for discussion. It is, I know, quite the fashion to decry all the practices of our forefathers as being old foggyish, and killing crows has fallen under the ban as a remnant of ungrounded prejudices. But there is a reason for most ancient customs of farmers, and there is more to be said against the crow than in his favor. Granting that he destroys some cut-worms and grubs, he balances this benefit by robbing the nests of far more valuable birds than himself. And a cowardly robber he is. Many a time I have seen much smaller birds driving him away; but when he finds a nest unprotected its contents have to suffer. That we have to rely on our feathered assistants for the destruction of insects does not imply that we are not to destroy anything in feathers. We have at least a choice in the help we will keep and naturally select those which do most good with the least injury.

Those who will not kill crows can prevent them from doing much mischief by sowing cornfields, liberally with corn. If it has been soaked in strychnine water it will be all the better. Scarecrows as usually made are not of much service. Crows have learned, or soon do learn, not to fear anything which they can see plainly, and a stick over the shoulder in imitation of a gun frightens them only a day or two. But let a bough house be built of branches with green leaves, and the scarecrow be concealed behind this, and the crows will be surely kept away. If a little gunpowder be burned in contact with the scarecrow the smell of powder will remain a long time, and no crow will go near the field. The smell of powder and the mystery of a concealed enemy will deter them as effectually as if a man were watching the field with a gun. W. J. F.

RAISING EARLY CHICKENS.

That excellent farmer's monthly, the Canadian Granger, has the following letter, from a London township correspondent in its April number:—

Whether for market or breeding purposes, poultry should be raised as early as possible. By a small outlay on a fowl house, farmers can have good sized chickens by the middle of May, or the first of June. At this time they are never less than fifty cents a pair in any city or town in Ontario. No better investment can be made than this. The only trouble is, farmers have no place to put their brood after hatching out. It is not necessary to have close, warm cellars, in order to raise a brood of early chickens. We have now a clutch that came out during the piercing weather of March and were put in an ordinary form, inside a coop, well filled with clover chaff. The floor was also bedded with this, and during the day were allowed to come out and scratch through it. Out of thirteen birds, only one died, and this was through palpable neglect. We have had birds come out in midsummer and not have such a large proportion of health ones and so small mortality. We deduce from this that poultry will stand a great amount of cold, if they are kept dry and well fed. Damp houses, whether in summer or winter, are suicidal to old or young. We venture to say early birds will be stronger and healthier. for two reasons:—First, the mothers are never in better condition than during the cold weather of winter.

2nd.—We have lost a considerable amount every year since we have been in business by bad debts.

3rd.—We find that several customers who have owed since last year are now going to other stores and paying cash for their goods and leaving us unpaid.

4th.—The keeping of our books and rendering accounts entails a large amount of extra labor for us at night, which is very tiresome as well as injurious to the health, and the labor has become so great that we must either give up the credit business or else employ a book-keeper at a large salary, as our profits are too small to admit of any more expense. We have chosen the former alternative, and we feel quite confident that it will be better for our customers as well as for ourselves, as we will be able then to pay cash for our goods and buy them a great deal cheaper on that account, and therefore we will sell them cheaper.

We hope, therefore, and it will be distinctly understood that we do not intend this only for those who have been slow in paying their accounts, nor for those who do not pay at all, but we mean it for YOU, dear reader, and for everyone who may in future visit our store, that we will not give credit to any retail customer under any pretence whatever, not even to the salesmen in the store.

Every person in our employment will be paid in cash every Saturday night, and if they want goods out of our store they must pay cash for them.

All persons who have accounts of any kind against us are requested to send in their accounts every week and get them paid, and anything that we want to purchase, either on the market or in the stores, we will pay cash for it.

All the Goods in the store will be marked down, on the first of May, to the LOWEST LIVING CASH PRICE, and all the Goods that are coming in, as well as those on hand will be sold at Lower Prices than they have ever been offered before in Napanee.

We venture to say early birds will be stronger and healthier, for two reasons:—First, the mothers are never in better condition than during the cold weather of spring. They are not irritated during incubation by parasites, and the fever which generally accompanies the system in hot weather, thus preventing the restlessness which is so common during warm weather in setting hens. It is nothing short of torture for hens to set three weeks during hot weather of June and July especially in the close and unhealthy quarters generally found in our poultry yards. Then, chickens hatched during hot weather are injured more by the hot sun of a Canadian summer than by cold. Nothing has a more debilitating effect on young broods than heat. For healthy, robust birds, hatch early.

DISBUDDING FRUIT TREES

The season for disbudding fruit trees is fast approaching. The importance of the operation is generally acknowledged, and upon its proper performance depends the production of clean, healthy wood and the best of fruit. Take for instance, a single branch of the peach tree, when it first starts in the spring; if in a healthy, fruit-bearing condition, it will throw out many shoots and great number of blossoms, and if the whole of these were left, it is probable two or three of the too leading shoots would draw all the nourishment to themselves and become rank and over-luxuriant, whilst the remainder would be weak and worthless. In like manner the fruit would be small, ill-flavored, and a great portion abortive. Hence the pruning called disbudding, by which we mean the removing of every shoot that is not required, and the stopping of new shoots that apparently, are not wanted to give form and health to the tree, by rubbing out buds which, if left, would grow. The same should be done with the fruit blossoms; so many of them should be rubbed away as to leave the remaining ones to gather full blood and form good fruit. All varieties of fruit trees require annually this system of pruning, and the time to do it is when they are in full bloom.

DO NOT ALLOW THE FROGS TO BE PARED.

The frog of the foot of every horse is the natural support of the foot, and should never be cut away except to remove the rough edges which occasionally appear from common wear. At a late meeting of the farriers and shorseshers in Wilmington, Del., there was a great deal said in condemnation of the manner in which horses are shod, especially in the rural districts. A lecturer, a veterinary surgeon (according to the New York Herald) said that "the frog of the foot was often pared away so artistically to make a neat job that the tendon of muscle that extended down the leg, over what is known as a pulley bone, and gave the foot its motion, was often injured, and then the horse would be weak in the legs and blunder. He severely characterized the habit of burning the hoof with a red-hot shoe to make it fit, and said there ought to be a law passed to hang any blacksmith who would use red-hot shoes in his way. The shoe should be fitted to the shape of the foot, rather than the foot fitted to the shoe.

"A perfect picture of Oriental repose," says a German correspondent. "is to be seen in the Turkish Parliament. The phlegmatic Dutchmen who sit half asleep in their comfortable chairs in the House of Deputies at the Hague are vivacity itself compared with the lifeless statues on exhibition here."

Mr. Robert Denison, a wine merchant, committed suicide at an hotel in Nottingham, by shooting himself through the heart. In his possession was found a piece of paper, bearing the following:—"I think there is nothing on earth so pure as my wife and children. I die like a dog which I richly deserve."

A Justice of the Peace in Michigan, having been hunted up with some difficulty by a telegraphic messenger, with a dispatch announcing his wife's death, refused to pay the charge of $1 for delivery. He said: "I ain't going to pay for that news, for I've been expecting the old woman to die for some time."

Not long since a woman died at the Royal Infirmary, at Wrexham, after suffering for about a month from a lodgment in the passage of her throat of some artificial teeth which she had accidentally swallowed in her sleep. The teeth was recovered, but inflammation set in, which gave rise to an abscess in the woman's lung, resulting in death.

A farmer named Burt met with a singular death at Llanlivery, in Cornwall. A sheep having died, he attempted to get rid of the carcass by throwing it down an old mine shaft adjacent to his farm. The cord by which the carcass had been dragged to the spot having twisted round Burt's leg, when he threw in the sheep, he was also dragged down the shaft, and fell 200 feet perpendicularly.

A story told in the American colony at Dresden is of an encounter between one of the young lieutenants of the army and a stalwart American. They jostled on the sidewalk and the officer drew his sword. There upon the American knocked him down violently enough to stun him, and having broken the sword over his knee, laid his card between the pieces and proceeded calmly on his way.

Two Manchester confectioners have been fined each $25 and costs for selling sweets colored by a poison called chromate of lead. The objects of the defendants in using the poison was to produce a bright yellow color. The peculiar kinds of sweets to which the poison was added was called "Kiss me, love." The city analyst found that each ounce of the candy contained one-fourth of a grain of poison.—Detroit Free Press.

Mr. Bergh is needed in the Turkish provinces. The fanatical Circassians drill their horses in their villages by a curious and brutal exercise. They spur and whip them repeatedly through a crowd of shouting men armed with long sticks, which are mercilessly used on the poor brute until it stands the torture with philosophy. The principle is to impress the animal with a notion that the iron will of its master is beyond all its natural instincts of fright and the bodily pain.

There is in Paris a vast establishment—the most extensive of its kind in the world—where the imitation of pearls, diamonds and precious stones generally is carried on with all the skill which modern ingenuity renders possible. The sand, upon which the whole art depends, is found in the forest of Fontainebleau. False pearls are lined with wax and scales of the roach and dace, which have to be stripped from the fish while living in order to retain the peculiar glistening hue. The setting is always of real gold and the fashion of the newest kind.

Night before last a tired, discouraged man out on North Hill went home and flung himself down on a lounge, and said "he wished he were dead, dead, dead." In two hours he was writhing in a premature and unseemable attack of cholera morbus, and howled, and prayed, and sweat, and had four doctors in the house, and drank a quart of medicine,

CLEANING BLACK LACE.

Wash it in skimmed milk, do not rub, but constantly squeeze it softly. When it seems clean, take it out and put it into a clean milk, also skimmed; give it another squeeze, and lay it out directly on sheets of stout paper; touch it every here and there with the fingers to draw out the scollops and edges; lay the sheets of paper over the lace, and a heavy weight over all till dry. If laid on anything soft, the moisture is absorbed, and the lace will not be so new looking.

To Remove Smoke and Dust—From wall paper, tie a large piece of clean white cloth over a broom and brush the wall down well. Then take a stale loaf of bread, cut it open and rub the soft side all over the paper. It will clean it "as nice as new." It will also remove spots of lime or withewash.

There is a Creedmoor in China. Certain officials at Nankin, who owe their rank to military services rendered by their fathers during the Tai-ping rebellion, used to compete once a month in archery practice, the successful candidates receiving pecuniary rewards; but now they use rifles, shooting at an iron target at a distance of 200 paces. The competitors are divided into five squads; when all the bullets hit the target, the marksman is called a red flag man and is entitled to a prize; the champions have a final round and the one who has the best score receives governmental preferment. The most popular arm is the Martini-Henry breech-loader, and during the past six months the riflemen have attained great accuracy in shooting.

For the information of Christian generally, it may be briefly stated that this Institution, now in full operation, owes its origin to the liberality of a Christian gentleman, a resident of Toronto, who has invested a portion of his means in the enterprise, as a free-will offering to the Lord, with the view of scattering broadcast over our land, TRACTS, BOOKS, &c., which unfold the exalted privileges of the believers, and treat of the "LIFE OF FAITH" or Trust, and of the power and peace of Holiness, and Gospel and Evangelical Literature.

Special notice is called to the fact that this is No Denominational Institution.

It is neither connected with, nor under the patronage of any particular church. All the Publications it issues will be strictly evangelical, and will meet the wants of all Christians. Largely those Books, &c., &c., will be those published by the Willard Tract Repository of Boston, under the care of the well known DR. CULLIS.

ALL PROFITS that may be made will be devoted to the establishment of a fund for gratuitous distribution of the Tracts and Books to persons and places where they are needed, as may be directed by the Committee. We beg also to say that this Fund for free distribution is open for donations to all who may desire to help in this work of God.

We ask all who may desire to promote the higher spiritual life of the church, and to help in winning souls for Christ, to co-operate with us by circulating equal religious literature throughout the land.

References for further information may be made to the following brethren and others, who may be able to act as a Committee for selection and distribution.

MANHOOD:
HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED!!

WE have recently published a new edition
of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the rational and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage,
etc., resulting from excesses.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or
two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, of this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years successful practice, that alarming diseases may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife, pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer can alter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of
every youth and every man in the land.

A MODEL MAIDEN.

'Tis not alone that she is fair,
And hath a wealth of golden hair;
'Tis not that she can play and sing,
Nor that she is gentle and kind
To charm a critic or a king;
And wears no chignon huge behind,
Nor high-heeled boots nor corset-laced,
To show her slenderness of waist;
'Tis not that she can talk with ease
On well-high anything you please;
'Tis not that she can row and ride,
And do a dozen things beside;
The reason why I love Miss Brown
Are that she never wears a frown,
Ne'er sulks, or pouts, or mopes or frets,
Or fusses about "stylish" or "sets";
Ne'er nurse laments by the fire,
Nor bids her friends her charms admire;
Ne'er bets upon the Derby Day,
And when she's lost omit to pay;
By bonnets does not bound her talk,
And is not indispensed to walk;
Ne'er bullies her small brothers, nor Esteems their childish games a bore;
With pigments ne'er her cheek defiles,
Nor practices coquettish wiles;
Needs not a maid to back her things,
Nor plaques, pearls or diamond rings;
On biscuits is content to launch;
Loves Shakespeare, Milton, Pope and Punch;
Never descends to vulgar slang,
And ne'er was known the door to bang!

THE FOUNDLING.

BY LIEUT. E. H. KELLOGG.

It was a cheerful Summer morning.
All nature rejoiced at the pleasant breeze that played among the tree-tops, not a cloud marred the sky, everything was bright and cheerful. It was just the day that George Owen had wished might grace his wedding.

The scene is laid in Maine, a few miles distant from Portland; a little farmhouse covered with roses and climbing jasmines,
a rustic green shaded with pine-trees, a murmuring waterfall and a rustling stream running under a radey-formed bridge, bright flowers and fruit are in the garden, and every surrounding bears an air of comfort. Old Farmer Owen, the proprietor, sits contentedly smoking in front of his domestic Eden. Quietly he laughs to himself.

"I scarcely know whether I stand on my head or heels," he said, rubbing his hands gently to and fro; "I can scarcely tell, I feel so truly happy. The day so long looked for has at last arrived, and I am to see George united to Mary."

At this moment George joined his father and sat down.

"There you are, my boy," he chuckled to himself; "as good-looking a lad as is to be found in the State. Bless you!
Bless you!" he continued fondly, "I have not known such a happy day since I married your mother; and the only sorrow that mars my happiness is that she is not alive to witness your marriage to Mary."

"Would that she were, father; but we can not question the will of God. Oh! I have so longed for this day. But now that it has come, and I should be so happy, there rests instead a strange feeling at my heart, which tells me something terrible will wreck the happiness of the day."

"Pshaw! George, you were always a strange lad," replied his father. "Feel

"I thought it best that you should know this; therefore on your marriage day have told you all. There, say nothing—let the past bury its dead. To me you have ever been dear as a niece, and after to-day will be dearer as a daughter.
To all others the secret shall be a secret till judgment day."

"You could find no trace as to whom Mary's mother was?" asked George.

"None," answered the old man. "I never strove to. Your mother and myself loved her as our own child."

"How like to you she was, Mary, resumed the young farmer. "The same eyes, the same fair face. O Mary, would that your mother had lived."

"O George," groaned his affianced as her eyes filled with tears, "may be it is better for both that she is dead."

He clasped her to his heart and swore renewed affection, and this brought sunshine to dry away the rain.

Just then the old minister arrived, and shortly after the invited guests followed suit. The marriage was not to take place until evening. In the meantime a dinner had been prepared, and as Pete the village fiddler hove in sight, it was proposed to have a dance on the green.
While the young folks were enjoying themselves, a new and uninvited guest made his appearance. He was a stranger, who, without an object, had been wandering around the neighborhood for a week or so past.

None knew him. He was tall in appearance, but slim and stooping. His keen, piercing eyes wandered restlessly
in their sunken sockets, but fell beneath the gaze of all beholders. A constant restless movement of his shrunken hands denoted a shattered, nervous system. It was whispered that he was not thoroughly
sane; but as he harmed none, no one molested him. And yet, notwithstanding his gray, disheveled locks and threadbare clothing, there was something about him that denoted the broken-down gentleman; and although avoided, still he was treated with common civility.
There was one thing in his favor—he never drank. He indulged in little if any conversation. He asked no favors, and had sufficient to live upon. He rented a small hut from an old hunter, but even this individual could give no intelligence of his antecedents to the busybodies of the vicinity. All that the Nimrod could reply to the questioners was:

"His name is Charley Wentley, and that's all I know about him."

During the dance this singular individual had wandered across the rustic bridge, and he stood watching the assemblage as if pleased with the merry making.

"Ha! ha! let her rip!" cried Pete, springing from the table on which he had been perched, and mingling among the dancers. "I'm in for a regular shake-down!"

As he shouted the words, he ran plumb
against the newcomer.

"Hello! who the devil are you?" he asked suddenly. And as his music

—my brain burnt, my eyes seemed like two balls of fire. My wife was false to me. She had fled with my false friend.
I cursed them both, and swore a fearful oath of vengeance, and then my brain reeled round, the agony of the moment was too much for me, and I fell senseless to the floor. A month passed, or so they told me. It seemed but a moment to me.
When I recovered my hair was gray, and I was an old man; but my strong desire for vengeance was unquenched. I searched the country round, but could find no clue to where the two had fled. However, my knife was with me—'tis here now!"

He drew a dirk from his bosom, laughing the same low, chilling laugh as before.

"One night I met him—my wife's reducer. We were alone. I grasped him by the throat. "Villain! wretch!" I cried, "where have you put her, where have you put my Kate?" He would not answer—he would not tell me where she was. I had him fast, though—my knife gleamed in the air, one blow was enough,
and he fell at my feet a bleeding corpse!
I was avenged!"

He uttered a maniacal laugh, and dropped his head upon his hand, while his elbows rested on his knees.

The culmination of the fearful revelation startled may so that she darted forward, causing a rustling of the bushes.

The next second the maniac saw her and started wildly to his feet.

"Ha! 'tis she again!" he gasped,
stretching forth his hands beseechingly.
"Kate! my Kate?"

He seized her and drew her to him tenderly.

"Nay, friend," she answered trembling,
"you are mistaken. I never saw you till to-day. Where can George be?"

"Do not seek to deceive me," he cried anxiously. "Ha, cursors," he exclaimed, seizing the ribbon to the miniature. "Do you dare wear his portrait in my presence?"

He tore the locket from her bosom, and gazed upon it, then clasped her in his arms again, and exclaimed:

"Forgive me, Kate, I know not what I do. Come, fly with me—we may be happy yet."

Mary shrieked for help, and George darted to her rescue. He saw her struggling in the arms of the madman, and with one blow told him to the earth.

"What is it, Mary?" he asked—"Did he harm you?"

"I know not," she returned, clinging to him. "He called me Kate, he tore the locket from me and clasped me in his arms. Nay, do not strike him again—he is not in his right mind."

Charles groined as he recovered from the blow.

"Where am I, Kate? Did I not see her, or was it a spirit from the other world? Ah, the miniature."

He groped upon the ground, and, discovering the locket, pressed it to his lips.
In doing so a secret spring permitted a paper to fall to the ground. He grasped it eagerly, and endeavored to read it;

"I am perfectly aware that all you say my spirits. It hangs over them like a thunder-cloud in midsummer, giving an air of gloomy sadness to all around. God send that nothing may happen to Mary!"

"Amen, my son. May the day pass off as bright as it has commenced!" returned Mr. Owen. Then, looking toward the house, he said cheerfully:
"See, here comes Mary. How beautiful
she looks in her white dress!"
Mary was eighteen, extremely beautiful, pure as a new-blown rose, a child of Nature fresh from the Lord's hand.
"Yes, father," answered George, rising
and pressing his brother to his breast,
"and that dress is not purer than my beloved. Your blessing?"
The old man wiped away a tear of joy,
and embraced them both as he besought
God's blessing on their wedding life.
George kissed his darling passionately as
he placed a rose in her dark wavy hair.
"Ah," murmuring the father, "dear,
dear love, how sweet to those who first possess thee,—they little know how many saddening scenes follow in thy path. 'Tis hard to crush their happiness
but I must make the disclosure to-day."
"I wish my mother were alive to-day, George," murmured Mary, still clinging
to her lover.
"She knows not what she wishes," remarked the old man aside.
"Yes," returned George. "It would doubtless be a source of joy to both our mothers; but I feel that they are gazing
at us from Heaven, and blessing us."
"Come my children," said Mr. Owen, interrupting them; "I have something important to reveal. Come, sit by me."
They complied.
"I have a secret to impart, and scarcely
know how to do it. But, as I'm a bluff old man, I will be explicit. You, Mary,
are not my niece, as has been generally supposed. There don't make a scene, I will give you my reasons for reporting
you as such, and I think you will forgive me the deception I have practised.
You have been taught to believe that my brother was your father, that he died in the West Indies, and that your mother died on her way. This was partly true.
Your mother did die on her way home,
my brother died in the West Indies, but
he never was married to my knowledge.
"But why, sir," asked the pale, trembling girl, "have you always kept me in ignorance of this?"
George drew her closer to him. At first she struggled to release herself, but he finally managed to quit her, and she was then a silent fit of weeping, which

was whispered that he was not thoroughly
sane; but as he harmed none, no one
molested him. And yet, notwithstanding his gray, disheveled looks and thread-

As he shouted the words, he ran plumb

ceased, so did the dancers.
"A man," replied the other, gazing at him with flashing eyes—"a man! And that's more than you can say."
He paused a moment, and then, falling into a chair, buried his head upon a table by which the chair stood.
"It is no reason, because I am ragged,
that you should insult me," he murmured.
"I have gray hairs—it was not always so!"
"Gas!" retorted Pete, who had taken overmuch hard cider. "Does your keeper know you're out?"
"For shame, Pete!" interrupted
George, pushing him aside. "He is a poor old man. Come, cheer up, friend!"
he said, as he laid his hand on the stranger's shoulder. "All must enjoy themselves to-day—it is my wedding day."
The man darted to his feet wildly.
"Wedding day!" he cried. "Don't you do it! Who is your bride? Is that her in the white dress? Ha! he gasped—
he trembled violently and clutched
Mary's hand. "Tis she. Come with me —come with you! Charles. Come with me, Kate!"
The startled girl drew affrightedly back,
and the man dropped her hand to cover
his face with his own. The next moment he rushed frantically into the woods,
groaning as he ran.
"No! she does not know me. She loves another! another! another!"
George would have followed had not
Mary interrupted him, and announced
that dinner was ready.
Five minutes later, all save Pete were discussing the good things offered inside
the farmhouse.
"Good gracious!" exclaimed the fiddler to himself, "that fellow's as mad as a March hare. If he'd yelled at me the way he did at George, he'd a nigh skeer-
ed me out of six months' growth. Got ter hev some more hard cider to steady my nerves for the next jig, or I'll never be able to swing a bow, nowhow!"
He was about to draw a mug, when Charles Wantley returned and slapped him gently on the shoulder. Pete turned, and, seeing who it was, darted into the house breathless with terror.
"Why does he start from me?" inquired the wanderer, passing his hand
wearily across his wrinkled brow, and
then sinking into a chair. "I would not harm him now. I will never do harm
again. The little birds do not fear me,
and yet men avoid my society. How strange! Yes, 'tis strange, indeed.
Murder will out!"
He laughed wildly, and, after a brief
pause, resumed: "I was a child once,
kneeling at my mother's knee. She taught me my prayers—they were—"
He could not remember them, evidently,
for he said, dreamily: "I can't remember them—all is blank here. I grew a back into the arms of one of the farmers.

"No, I cannot see it," he murmured.
"Some of you read this. It is addressed to me—Charles Wantley, Portland, Maine!"
The old minister took it and read as follows:
"Husband, forgive me the wrong I have done you. Could you but know all I have suffered, I know you would. I do not know that I shall ever reach you alive, for I can feel that I am going fast. Perhaps it is better that it should be so, that we never meet again; but should I die,
take care of this, our child, for 'tis yours,
Charles—I swear it with my dying breath.
Take care of it for the love you once bore
its unfortunate mother.
CATHERINE."
Wantley sprang to his feet, gasping:
"Where is she? Where is my Kate?"
"If you have reference to the one pictured in that miniature," returned George, "she is dead."
The man groaned, and laid his hands
upon his heart.
"My father found her frozen dead upon the road, some seventeen years ago,
with a live child upon her bosom."
"The child—where is the child?"
groaned Wantley.
George led Mary forward:
"Here," he said—"to-day to be my bride."
The new-found father took both her hands in his. He gazed earnestly at her.
"How like," he muttered. "Let me kiss you for your mother's sake. I think my brain has been turned. 'Tis clear again. Thank thee, Heaven, for this home of joy. Take her young man.
Make her happy, and may Heaven bless you, as I do. Kate."
A bright light shone in his eyes as he looked upward, and then with a gasp he fell back dead.
Too much joy had snapped the heart strings asunder. Death had followed in the wake of reason.
There was no wedding that day—none
until a few months afterwards.

turned Mr. Owen. Then, looking toward the house, he said cheerfully:
"See, here comes Mary. How beautiful
she looks in her white dress."

Mary was eighteen, extremely beautiful, pure as a new-blown rose, a child of Nature fresh from the Lord's hand.

"Yes, father," answered George, rising
and pressing his betrothed to his breast,
"and that dress is not purer than my beloved. Your blessing?"

The old man wiped a way a tear of joy,
and embraced them both as he besought
God's blessing on their wedding life.
George kissed his darling passionately as
he placed a rose in her dark wavy hair.

"Ah," murmuring the father, "dear,
dear love, how sweet to those who first
possess thee,—they little know how many saddening scenes follow in their path. 'Tis hard to crush their happiness
but I must make the disclosure to-day."

"I wish my mother were alive to-day, George," murmured Mary, still clinging
to her lover.

"She knows not what she wishes," remarked the old man aside.

"Yes," returned George. "It would
doubtless be a source of joy to both our
mothers; but I feel that they are gazing
at us from Heaven, and blessing us."

"Come my children," said Mr. Owen,
interrupting them: "I have something

They complied.

"I have a secret to impart, and scarcely
know how to do it. But, as I'm a bluff
old man, I will be explicit. You, Mary,
are not my niece, as has been generally supposed. There didn't make a scene, I will give you my reasons for reporting
you as such, and I think you will forgive me the deception I have practiced.
You have been taught to believe that my brother was your father, that he died in
the West Indies, and that your mother
died on her way. This was partly true.
Your mother did die on her way home,
my brother died in the West Indies, but
he never was married to my knowledge.

"But why, sir," asked the pale, trembling girl, "have you always kept me in ignorance of this?"

George drew her closer to him. At
first she struggled to release herself, but he finally managed to quiet her, and she gave way to a silent fit of weeping, which greatly relieved her.

"Listen," returned the former. "Sevteen years ago, on Winter evening, I was returning home from market. The snow fell fast, and it was bitter cold. Glad as I was in a warm overcoat and buffalo robe
I could feel the piercing wind cut me through and through. I had nearly reached home when I heard my dog barking. Thinking that some one might be snowed out, I was about to start up my horse, when he came to a dead halt in front of what appeared to be a heap of snow. I struck him with my whip, but no persuasion could make him move. I jumped from the sleigh to lead him on,
when I heard the low, faint cry of a child in distress. Where could it be?
The dog commenced pawing the snow
from the heap, uttering low, whining barks. I bent down as the infant's cry struck me again, and saw a woman in the snow. I took her up, placed her in the sleigh, and drove her home. All efforts to revive her were unsuccessful—she died.
On her frozen bosom was a new-born babe. Poor little innocent, I did not know what might have been its mother's child. You were that child, Mary. Can you blame me for the deception I have used?"

"No," she replied impetuously, clasping his neck and kissing him. "Kind friend, if Uncle no longer, still my best my kindest friend."

"But, father," asked George, "were there no clues by which you might have found out who the lady was?"

"Yes, one," answered the former, producing a locket; "this locket contains her likeness."

He handed it to them, and while they were examining it he continued:

"For shame, Pete!" interrupted
George, pushing him aside. "He is a
poor old man. Come, cheer up, friend!"
he said, as he laid his hand on the stran-
ger's shoulder. "All must enjoy themselves to-day—it is my wedding day."

The man darted to his feet wildly.
"Wedding day!" he cried. "Don't
you do it! Who is your bride? Is that
her in the white dress? Ha!" he gasped
—he trembled violently and clutched
Mary's hand. "Tis she. Come with me —come with your Charles. Come with me, Kate!"

The startled girl flew affrightedly back,
and the man dropped her hand to cover
his face with his own. The next moment he rushed frantically into the woods,
groaning as he ran.

"No! she does not know me. She loves another! another! another!"

George would have followed had not
Mary interrupted him, and announced
that dinner was ready.

Five minutes later, all save Pete were discussing the good things offered inside
the farmhouse.

"Good gracious!" exclaimed the fiddler to himself, "that fellow's as mad as a March hare. If he'd yelled at me the way he did at George, he'd a nigh skeer-
ed me out of six months' growth. Got ter
hev some more hard cider to steady my
nerves for the next jig, or I'll never be able to swing a bow, nohow!"

He was about to draw a mug, when Charles Wentley returned and slapped him gently on the shoulder. Pete turned, and, seeing who it was, darted into the house breathless with terror.

"Why does he start from me?" inquired the wanderer, passing his hand
wearily across his wrinkled brow, and
then sinking into a chair, "I would not
harm him now. I will never do harm
again. The little birds do not fear me,
and yet men avoid my society. How strange! Yes, 'tis strange, indeed.
Murder will out!"

He laughed wildly, and, after a brief
pause, resumed: "I was a child once,
kneeling at my mother's knee. She taught me my prayers—they were—"
He could not remember them, evidently,
for he said, dreamily: "I can't remember them—all is blank here. I grew a boy then, beloved of all. My schoolmates called me happy Charles. Happy no longer—happy no more!" He sighed as he murmured; "My head seems strange to-day. Many is the time that I have lain beside the little brook that runs before our little cottage, and, gazing on its glassy bosom, watched the tiny fish glide along its pebbly bottom. Those were happy days to me. How different now—my hair has grown gray, but not with age." He looked wildly, and then whispered: "One night did it."

At this juncture Mary appeared in the door of the farmhouse, and then hid herself behind a bush near Charles. There was something that drew her irresistibly towards the strange man.

"I'll tell you how it happened," he continued. "I had a wife, a darling wife, whom I loved with all my heart and soul
—my whole life was wrapt up in her.
She loved me in return—I know it—for a time. 'Twas then a friend came between us—oh! what a friend he proved to me.
Curses on his black heart! I hated him then, I hate him still. One day my wife acted different from usual—she was not herself at all. I strove to please her.
She was ill, she said; and, leaving her to rest, I went to my store. My friend called the same afternoon. I was telling like a slave, while she for whom I toiled drove out with that man, whom I detested from my very soul. I delayed supper til their return. Nine o'clock struck—still no tidings. Just then the bell rang, a boy had left a note for me. I took it up and was about to throw it aside in disgust, for I could bear nothing when approached from my heart's idol; but a vague idea seized me when I saw that it was in my wife's handwriting. What could it mean? I tore it open in trembling haste

we never meet again; but should I die,
take care of this, our child, for 'tis yours.
Charles—I swear it with my dying breath.
Take care of it for the love you once bore
its unfortunate mother.

CATHERINE."

Wentley sprang to his feet, gasping:
"Where is she? Where is my Kate?"

"If you have reference to the one

George, "she is dead."

The man groaned, and laid his hands
upon his heart.

"My father found her frozen dead upon

"The child—where is the child?"
groaned Wentley.

George led Mary forward:

THE RELIGION OF THE RUSSIAN PEASANT.

It must be admitted that the Russian
people are in a certain sense religious.
They go regularly to church on Sundays and holy days, cross themselves repeatedly when they pass a church or icon,
take the Holy Communion at stated
seasons, rigorously abstain from animal food—not only on Wednesdays and Fridays, but also during Lent and the other long fast—make occasional pilgrimages to holy shrines, and in a word, fulfil punctually all the ceremonial observances
which they suppose necessary for salvation. But here their religiousness ends.
They are generously profoundly ignorant of religious doctrine, and know little or nothing of Holy writ. A peasant, it is said, was once asked by a priest if he could name the three persons of the Trinity, and replied without a moment's hesitation: "How can one know that,
Batushka? Of course it is the Saviour,
the mother of God, and Saint Nicholas,
the miracle worker!" That answer represents fairly enough the theology attainments of a very large section of the peasantry. The anecdote is so well known and so often repeated that it is probably an invention, but it is not a calumny. Of theology, and of what Protestants term the "inner religious life," the Russian peasant has no conception. For him the ceremonial part of religion suffices, and he has the most unbounded, child-like confidence in the saving efficacy of the rites which he practices. If he has been baptized in infancy; has regularly observed the fasts; has annually partaken of the Holy Communion, and has just confessed and
received extreme unction, he feels death
approach with the most perfect tranquillity. He is tormented with no doubts
as to the efficacy of faith or works, and
has no fears that his past life may possibly have rendered him unfit for eternal
felicity. Like a man in a sinking ship
who has buckled on his life-preserver, he feels perfectly secure. With no fears for the future, and little regret for the present or the past, he awaits calmly the dread summons, and dies with a resignation which a Stoic philosopher might envy.

THE BAGPIPES.

"What! Music in bagpipes!" a lady said,
"With their dull, monotonous drone!"
Up spoke a grim hero—"They'd raise the dead,
As many a soldier has known."
He was gray and bronzed. "I remember a day,
In the year that the Sepoys rose,
When a handful we stood in a hill-fort at bay;
Our powder all gone, our comrades far away,
Hemmed in by our fiends of foes!"

He drew himself up. "Madam, one after one,
We stepped to the breach to die;
And the smoke of their thousands hid the sun,
And their wild yells shook the sky;
The plunging of shot and hissing of shell;
The rattle of cold steel crossed;
The sharp, quick shriek, as the wounded fell;
The rush, and the tumult, and roar as of hell—
We knew, well we knew, all was lost!"

But sudden, far distant, there rose and died
A bagpipe's scream o'er the din.
Again! 'Tis the Highlanders coming!" we cried:
"An hour more, boys, and we win!"
With the strength of ten thousand and more we stood;
And the hillside, so fair and green,
Bran red with the rivers of traitors' blood.
For the Highlanders came like a roaring flood—
And that's what the bagpipes mean!"

A RICH LADY BECOMES A MORMON.

Dubuque, Iowa, is gossiping over the recent adherence to Mormonism of a lady formerly of high social position in that city. She and her husband came there years since, a newly-wedded couple. He was bright and capable, and soon made his mark in business and politics, while she was an ardent religionist of the emotional type, and became noted in church activities. But the tide changed. The husband lost his property, and the couple moved to the Territories. He, however, soon took to drink, and became worthless, and the wife got a divorce and finally went to Salt Lake City, opened a millinery establishment, and conducted it with more than usual success and profit. Indeed, her business capacity attracted the attention of some of the leading Mormons. She was still beautiful, of a lithe and commanding figure, and proud as Lucifer.

As she matured in years, her religious nature became more marked, her emotional piety was fervid and positive, and she would be a valuable acquisition to any religious body. The wily and penetrating Mormon leaders were not slow to discover the value of the beautiful Gentile, that she was made of such stuff as sturdy missionaries and working apostles should be who, in their labors, should glorify God and add to the power and might of the church militant of Joseph Smith. In time her house became the resort of leading Mormons. Bishop Herbert C. Kingsley and other leading lights were equally charmed by her hospitality, her culture, her conversation, and the prospect of so able and shining convert. No less a man than the prophet, the head of the only one and true church, Brigham Young himself, left his twenty-eight wives and was a frequent visitor at her house, nor would we attempt to say which pleased him most, her charming manner or the prospect of so effective an acquisition to the church of which he was the distinguished head. The upshot is that the woman has now joined the Mormon Church, and is reported "sealed" to one of the chief saints of Mormondom. —Toledo Blade.

A FRENCH ABERNETHY.

A French journal says that a famous French surgeon, lately deceased, who was brusque and unpolished, found, on entering his house one day, an old priest who had been long waiting his return. "What do you want of me?" "I want you to look at this," weekly replied the priest, taking up an old woolen carvat, which revealed upon the nape of his neck a hideous tumor. "You'll have to die with that," coolly remarked the surgeon. "I thank you, doctor," simply replied the priest, replacing his carvat. "and am much obliged to you for warning me, for I can prepare myself, as well as my poor parishioners, who love me very

THE FIRST MAYFLOWERS.

The blustering, shrieking scolding March
Went bowling down Time's devious way;
And April, winsome, bright and arch,
Just glancing back at sunny May Stepped on the scene, but quite lost heart
In looking at the drifts of snow
That March had left, in manner tart.
In nooks where violet ought to grow.

But, oh, the sanguine, sturdy maid!
What though the spiteful March left traps
To sicken her with dire mishaps?
To Plymouth's woods, all unafraid,
With footsteps fleet she quickly sped,
And ere the tears had dried she shed,
The pink arbutus, shy and sweet,
Awakened by her tripping feet.

And, enticing sight, 'mid leaves and snow,
Of here and there a pink-tinted too,
Took them for blossoms out ere they,
And quick themselves in spring array
They dressed, when, lo! they stood alone,
And looked at footprints whence had flown
The tinted toes that had beguiled
Them from their sleep ere Spring had smiled.

EXTRAORDINARY CAREER OF A LONDON FEMALE DETECTIVE.

The commissioner of a London paper narrates the chief incidents in the adventurous career of a woman who has for several years served the authorities at Scotland Yard as a detective. Placing herself in relation with the parish doctor she volunteered to nurse those families whose honesty was suspected by the authorities. As a nurse she disarmed all suspicion, and did not fail to take careful note of all she heard. Her manners were also apparently so loose and low that but little restraint was observed in her presence, and her reports forwarded to Scotland Yard were thus rendered all the more valuable. As a monthly nurse she welcomed into the world the children of notorious criminals who were ultimately destined to become her prey, while as a sick nurse she extracted from her half-unconscious and debilitated fever patients the confession of some dark deed, and hints as to the whereabouts of confederates in crime. Such was the general plan of action observed by this extraordinary woman; but this was rather a slow process, and at times it was necessary to fall at once upon the wrongdoer. On one occasion, for instance, the police received information that there was a gang of false money-makers in a certain street, but notwithstanding every effort they were unable to ascertain in which house the coiners worked. The services of the female detective were thereupon requisitioned, and she was despatched to the street in question to see what could be done. After walking up and down a little while she noticed a child come out of one of the houses, whose face indicated a kind disposition. Seizing hastily this opportunity the detective feigned illness, and begged to be taken indoors for a moment. Forgetful of her parent's warning the child, in her excitement, and seeing nothing but a woman apparently in great agony, at once, and without giving alarm, admitted the detective into the house. The sudden entrance thus obtained enabled the detective to hear the metallic sounds proceeding from the coiners' workshop before the latter were aware that any stranger was in the house. They were not long in discovering their danger. Before the detective had time to leave the premises the chief of the gang rushed up from the cellar where he was at work

—my brain burnt, my eyes seemed like two balls of fire. My wife was false to me. She had fled with my false friend. I cursed them both, and swore a fearful oath of vengeance, and then my brain reeled round, the agony of the moment was too much for me, and I fell senseless to the floor. A month passed, or so they told me. It seemed but a moment to me. When I recovered my hair was gray, and I was an old man; but my strong desire for vengeance was unquenched. I searched the country round, but could find no clue to where the two had fled. However, my knife was with me—'tis here now!"

He drew a dirk from his bosom, laughing the same low, chilling laugh as before.

"One night I met him—my wife's seducer. We were alone. I grasped him by the throat. 'Villain! wretch!' I cried, 'where have you put her, where have you put my Kate?' He would not answer—he would not tell me where she was. I had him fast, though—my knife gleamed in the air, one blow was enough, and he fell at my feet a bleeding corpse! I was avenged!"

He uttered a maniacal laugh, and dropped his head upon his hand, while his elbows rested on his knees.

The culmination of the fearful revelation startled may so that she darted forward, causing a rustling of the bushes.

The next second the maniac saw her and started wildly to his feet.

"Ha! 'tis she again!" he gasped, stretching forth his hands beseechingly. "Kate! my Kate?"

He seized her and drew her to him tenderly.

"Nay, friend," she answered trembling, "you are mistaken. I never saw you till to-day. Where can George be?"

"Do not seek to deceive me," he cried angrily. "Ha, curses," he exclaimed, seizing the ribbon to the miniature. "Do you dare wear his portrait in my presence?"

He tore the locket from her bosom, and gazed upon it, then clasped her in his arms again, and exclaimed:

"Forgive me, Kate, I knew not what I do. Come, fly with me—we may be happy yet."

Mary shrieked for help, and George darted to her rescue. He saw her struggling in the arms of the madman, and with one blow told him to the earth.

"What is it, Mary?" he asked—"Did he harm you?"

"I know not," she returned, clinging to him. "He called me Kate, he tore the locket from me and clasped me in his arms. 'Nay, do not strike him again—he is not in his right mind.'"

Charles groaned as he recovered from the blow.

"Where am I, Kate? Did I not see her, or was it a spirit from the other world? Ah, the miniature."

He groped upon the ground, and, discovering the locket, pressed it to his lips. In doing so a secret spring permitted a paper to fall to the ground. He grasped it eagerly, and endeavored to read it; but his sight was too dim, and he fell back into the arms of one of the farmers.

"No, I cannot see it," he murmured. "Some of you read this. It is addressed to me—Charles Wantley, Portland,

I thought it best that you should w this; therefore on your marriage have told you all. There, say nothing—let the past bury its dead. To me have ever been dear as a niece, and r to-day will be dearer as a daughter. All others the secret shall be a secret judgment day."

You could find no trace as to whom y's mother was?" asked George. None," answered the old man. "I or strove to. Your mother and my loved her as our own child."

How like to you she was, Mary, med the young farmer. "The same s, the same fair face. O Mary, did that your mother had lived." O George, groaned his affianced as eyes filled with tears, "may be it is er for both that she is dead," he clasped her to his heart and swore wed affection, and this brought sun- is to dry away the rain.

t then the old minister arrived, and rtly after the invited guests followed . The marriage was not to take place il evening. In the meantime a din- had been prepared, and as Pete the ge fiddler hove in sight, it was pro- ded to have a dance on the green. ile the young folks were enjoying selves, a new and uninvited guest le his appearance. "La! ha! let her rip!" cried Pete, gaily, from the table on which he had perched, and mingling among the dancers. "I'm in for a regular shake-up!"

He shouted the words, he ran plumb at the newcomer.

"Hello! who the devil are you?" he asked suddenly. And as his music died, so did the dancers.

"Man," replied the other, gazing at him with flashing eyes—"a man! And more than you can say."

He paused a moment, and then, falling in a chair, buried his head upon a table by which the chair stood.

"It is no reason, because I am ragged, you should insult me," he murmured. "I have gray hairs—it was not always as I am now."

"You're out?" "Does your keep-ow you're out?"

"For shame, Pete!" interrupted George, pushing him aside. "He is an old man. Come, cheer up, friend!"

The startled girl drew frightfully back, he man dropped her hand to cover her face with his own. The next moment he rushed frantically into the woods, leaving her as he ran.

"She does not know me. She another! another! another!" George would have followed had not interrupted him, and announced dinner was ready.

A few minutes later, all save Pete were sitting at the good things offered inside armchairs.

"Good gracious!" exclaimed the widow to herself, "that fellow's as mad as a hatter. If he'd yelled at me the day he did at George, he'd a nigh skeered out of six months' growth. Gotter one more hard cider to stiddy my nerves for the next jig, or I'll never be so swing a bow, now!"

"I was about to draw a mug, when les Wantley returned and slapped gently on the shoulder. Pete turned, seeing who it was, darted into the house breathless with terror.

"Why does he start from me?" inquired the wanderer, passing his hand lightly across his wrinkled brow, and sinking into a chair. "I would not harm him now. I will never do harm to a soul. The little birds do not fear me, yet men avoid my society. How strange! Yes, 'tis strange, indeed. Or will you?"

He laughed wildly, and, after a brief pause, resumed: "I was a child once, once at my mother's knee. She told me my prayers—they were—'I could not remember them, evidently,' said, dreamily: 'I can't remember them—all is blank here. I grew a

"you are mistaken. I never saw you till to-day. Where can George be?"

"Do not seek to deceive me," he cried angrily. "Ha, cursos," he exclaimed, seizing the ribbon to the miniature. "Do you dare wear his portrait in my presence?"

He tore the locket from her bosom, and gazed upon it, then clasped her in his arms again, and exclaimed:

"Forgive me, Kate, I know not what I do. Come, fly with me—we may be happy yet."

Mary shrieked for help, and George darted to her rescue. He saw her struggling in the arms of the madman, and with one blow telled him to the earth.

"What is it, Mary?" he asked—"Did he harm you?"

"I know not," she returned, clinging to him. "He called me Kate, he tore the locket from me and clasped me in his arms. 'Nay, do not strike him again—he is not in his right mind.'"

Charles groined as he recovered from the blow.

"Where am I, Kate? Did I not see her, or was it a spirit from the other world? Ah, the miniature!"

He groped upon the ground, and, discovering the locket, pressed it to his lips. In doing so a secret spring permitted a paper to fall to the ground. He grasped it eagerly, and endeavored to read it; but his sight was too dim, and he fell back into the arms of one of the farmers.

The old minister took it and read as follows:

"Husband, forgive me the wrong I have done you. Could you but know all I have suffered, I know you would. I do not know that I shall ever reach you alive, for I can feel that I am going fast. Perhaps it is better that it should be so, that we never meet again; but should I die, take care of this, our child, for 'tis yours. Charles—I swear it with my dying breath. Take care of it for the love you once bore its unfortunate mother."

CATHERINE.

Wantley sprang to his feet, gasping:

"Where is she? Where is my Kate?"

"If you have reference to the one pictured in that miniature," returned George, "she is dead."

The man groined, and laid his hands upon his heart.

"My father found her frozen dead upon the road, some seventeen years ago, with a live child upon her bosom."

"The child—where is the child?" groined Wantley.

George led Mary forward:

"Here," he said—"to-day to be my bride."

The new-found father took both her hands in his. He gazed earnestly at her.

"How like," he muttered—"Let me kiss you for your mother's sake. I think my brain has been turned. 'Tis clear again. Thank thee, Heaven, for this home of joy. Take her young man. Make her happy, and may Heaven bless you, as I do. Kate."

A bright light shone in his eyes as he looked upward, and then with a gasp he fell back dead.

Too much joy had snapped the heart strings asunder. Death had followed in the wake of reason.

There was no wedding that day—none until a few months afterwards.

THE RELIGION OF THE RUSSIAN PEASANT.

It must be admitted that the Russian people are in a certain sense religious. They go regularly to church on Sundays and holy days, cross themselves repeatedly when they pass a church or icon, take the Holy Communion at stated seasons, rigorously abstain from animal food—not only on Wednesdays and Fridays, but also during Lent and the other long fast—make occasional pilgrimages to holy shrines, and in a word, fulfil punctiliously all the ceremonial observances which they suppose necessary for salvation. But here their religiousness ends. They are generously profoundly ignorant of religious doctrine, and know little of our criminals who were ultimately destined to become her prey, while as a sick nurse she extracted from her half unconscious and debilitated fever patients the confession of some dark deed, and hints as to the whereabouts of confederates in crime. Such was the general plan of action observed by this extraordinary woman; but this was rather a slow process, and at times it was necessary to fall at once upon the wrongdoer. On one occasion, for instance, the police received information that there was a gang of false money-makers in a certain street, but notwithstanding every effort they were unable to ascertain in which house the coiners worked. The services of the female detective were thereupon requisitioned, and she was despatched to the street in question to see what could be done. After walking up and down a little while she noticed a child come out of one of the houses, whose face indicated a kind disposition. Seizing hastily this opportunity the detective feigned illness, and begged to be taken indoors for a moment. Forgetful of her parent's warning the child, in her excitement, and seeing nothing but a woman apparently in great agony, at once, and without giving alarm, admitted the detective into the house. The sudden entrance thus obtained enabled the detective to hear the metallic sounds proceeding from the coiners' workshop before the latter were aware that any stranger was in the house. They were not long in discovering their danger. Before the detective had time to leave the premises the chief of the gang rushed up from the cellar, where he was at work, and in his fury hurled a ladle full of molten lead at her head. Fortunately the spoke bonnet that she wore saved her life; the burns she received were not fatal, though they destroyed her hair and its roots. The police arrived in time, on hearing the alarm, to arrest 18 coiners. The chief, who was first aware of the surprise, was able to escape, but he was subsequently captured in France, and there sentenced to 18 years' servitude in the galleys. It might have been imagined that if anything could make a woman abandon her peculiar calling it would be the loss of her hair; but with the detective it only increased her love of what she called the sport. She considered that it would now be more easy for her to dress as a boy, and in this, her favourite guise, she penetrated many a thieves' den. On one occasion, however, she was discovered. A brawny thief asked her to speak, that is to say, to give the passwords and to use certain slang expressions known only to the particular gang whom she was spying. This she was unable to do. The thief then inquired whether anyone had seen her enter the house, and on her answering in the negative, coolly informed her that she would never be seen to go out again. This was the signal for execution, and after brandishing an iron bar, he struck a terrible blow at the detective's head. She had just time, however, to dash her hand through a window pane and spring a rattle, and the police, stationed outside, rushed in to the rescue. They found the detective lying insensible on the floor with her skull fractured, and it has been her boast that this adventure cost her 14 small pieces of bone extracted from the wound. Still undaunted, and so long as health lasted, the detective continued on the scent, encountering adventures at every step, always in danger, always indulging in hand-to-hand fights, and selecting indiscriminately for her foes both men and women, proving on either her skill in the "art of self defence." She constantly received subsidies from Scotland Yard, and was armed with the magic whistle, rattle, and number, given her by the authorities, and which ensured the assistance of every policeman, stranger or not, whose services she might find it necessary to call for. Sickened at last subdued this turbulent spirit, and the thieves on the Surrey side need no longer fear the visits of the female detective.

AFRAID OF THE DEVIL.

A painful scene appears, by the account given of it in the Stirling Journal, to have occurred on Sunday last week, in a summit of the church incumbent of Joseph Smith. In time her house became the resort of leading Mormons. Bishop Herbert C. Kingsley and other leading lights were equally charmed by her hospitality, her culture, her conversation, and the prospect of so able and shining convert. No less a man than the prophet, the head of the only one and true church, Brigham Young himself, left his twenty-eight wives and was a frequent visitor at her house, nor would we attempt to say which pleased him most, her charming manner or the prospect of so effective an acquisition to the church of which he was the distinguished head. The upshot is that the woman has now joined the Mormon Church, and is reported "sealed" to one of the chief saints of Mormondom. —Toledo Blade.

A FRENCH ABERNETHY.

A French journal says that a famous French surgeon, lately deceased, who was brusque and unpolished, found, on entering his house one day, an old priest who had been long waiting his return. "What do you want of me?" "I want you to look at this," meekly replied the priest, taking off an old woollen carvat, which revealed upon the nape of his neck a hideous tumor. "You'll have to die with that," coolly remarked the surgeon. "I thank you, doctor," simply replied the priest, replacing his carvat. "and am much obliged to you for warning me, for I can prepare myself, as well as my poor parishioners, who love me very much." The surgeon who was never astonished at great things, looked upon this priest, who received his death sentence unmoved, with amazement, and said:—"Come to-morrow, at eight o'clock to the Hotel Dieu, and ask for me." He was prompt. The surgeon procured for him a special room, and in a month the man went out cured. When leaving he took out of a sack thirty francs in small change. "It is all I have to offer, you, doctor," he said; "I came here on foot from Rouen in order to save this." The doctor looked at the money, smiled, and drawing a handful of gold from his pocket, put it in the bag along with the thirty francs, saying, "It is for your poor" and the priest went away. Some years later the surgeon, feeling death to be near, bethought him of the priest, and wrote to him. He came at once, and the surgeon received at his hand the last consolation of religion.

Dr. Jowett, the brilliant head master of Balliol, the cleverest of the Oxford Colleges, is very independent in feeling, paying very little deference to the magnates of his church. Some dismay was caused by his having Mr. and Mrs. Lewes (George Eliot) as his guests at Oxford; but dismay would be a feeble word to express the feeling aroused by an incident which occurred on the Sunday during which the two famous heretics stayed there. On that Sunday, Lewes and his wife went to hear their host preach. Jowett had gone on before them, and he was just ascending to the pulpit when he saw his guests enter the door. The church was crowded, and the guests were vainly looking for seats. Jowett beckoned them to advance, and they did so very timidly, not being much used to churches. They supposed seats would be found among the Dons and solemn folk, but there were none; meanwhile Jowett still beckoned, they shyly advancing, when they were presently established on each side of the Communion table, in the large high-backed chairs usually reserved for bishops, where they sat fronting the amazed congregation, and hardly able to conceal their sense of the novelty of the situation, until absorbed in the magnificent sermon. This may be safely regarded as the boldest thing ever done by an English clergyman.

THE RELIGION OF THE RUSSIAN PEASANT.

It must be admitted that the Russian
people are in a certain sense religious.

take the Holy Communion at stated

holy shrines, and in a word, fulfil punctuously all the ceremonial observances
which they suppose necessary for salvation. But here their religiousness ends.
They are generously profoundly ignorant of religious doctrine, and know little or nothing of Holy writ. A peasant, it is said, was once asked by a priest if he could name the three persons of the Trinity, and replied without a moment's
hesitation: "How can one know that,
Batushka! Of course it is the Saviour,
the mother of God, and Saint Nicholas,
the miracle worker." That answer represents fairly enough the theology attainments of a very large section of the peasantry. The anecdote is so well known and so often repeated that it is probably an invention, but it is not a calumny. Of theology, and of what Protestants term the "inner religious
life," the Russian peasant has no conception. For him the ceremonial part of religion suffices, and he has the most un-
bounded, child-like confidence in the
saving efficacy of the rites which he practices. If he has been baptized in infancy; has regularly observed the
fasts; has annually partaken of the Holy Communion, and has just confessed and
received extreme unction, he feels death
approach with the most perfect tranquillity. He is tormented with no doubts
as to the efficacy of faith or works, and
has no fears that his past life may possibly have rendered him unfit for eternal
felicity. Like a man in a sinking ship
who has buckled on his life-preserver, he feels perfectly secure. With no fears for
the future, and little regret for the present of the past, he awaits calmly the
dread summons, and dies with a resignation which a Stoic philosopher might
envy.

AFRAID OF THE DEVIL.

A painful scene appears, by the account given of it in the Stirling Journal, to have occurred on Sunday, last week, in a church near Gartmore, in that county.
The minister, who is in the habit of warning his congregation on special occasions against the machinations of the evil one,
was delivering a discourse on his favorite theme, when suddenly a blind roller behind the pulpit lost its hold, falling right over the preacher, and completely concealing him for a time from his flock.
In its descent the roller smashed a number of window panes, and the clatter of the falling glass added panic to the already terrified condition of the enshrouded preacher. Ignorant of the cause of the sudden darkness and horrible noise, he thought he might have exceeded the bounds of discretion in his denunciation of the devil, who had thereupon arrived hastily in person, bent on retaliation. A frightful shriek of "I am gone," echoed through the church, and the maddened preacher with one bound cleared the pulpit, nor ever stopped until he reached the extreme corner of the edifice. It may be well imagined that the suddenness of this alarming incident and its dramatic nature exercises a most powerful effect on the nerves of all who witness
it. Fortunately there was no general panic or the consequences might have been serious; but the story should be a lesson to those ministers who touch upon the delicate question of the personality of the devil to retain their self-possession under any circumstances, and not to leave the pulpit unless absolutely ejected from it by force.

tion of Iowa has decided that male teachers in the public schools must not be un-

A CLERICAL HUMBUG.

Sumptuary laws have never been a great success, and it may reasonably be expected that the conduct of the Rev.
Robert Burton, vicar of Great Tey, Essex Eng. will not find many imitators. The reverend gentleman recently issued an order that the girls attending the Sunday-school should not wear either collars,
cuffs, artificial flowers, feathers, brooches, brooches, or earrings. Eight girls who dared to disobey the injunction were ejected from the school on Easter-day, the result being a general stampede of the other girls. Good Mr. Burton is now said to be hesitating whether he shall withdraw the decree or prepare a similar order for the ladies who attend his church.

Mrs. Southworth, the writer, is described as a quiet, retiring little person, with a slight, youthful figure, intensely black hair, and dark eyes that look from behind their half closed lids with a peering expression, as if searching among the living for the ghosts that are said to be her boon companions. Across her forehead are deeply-graven lines, and she is silent to a marked degree, except at her own home, where she is described as genial and pleasant.

Mrs. Commodore Vanderbilt is the richest widow of her age in America.

A New York paper mentions a new kind of marriage announcement, in which only the name of the bride and clergyman appear. As civilization advances, the groom becomes of less and less importance on such occasions.

Humorous writers among women are rare.

THE EXPRESS.

NAPANEE, MAY 11th, 1877.

Mr. Cartwright has introduced a Bill enacting that hereafter the Canadian the revenue have to be met by a lev upon the necessities of life, it is of the greatest moment that the utmost prudence, caution, and good judgement should be exercised in order that the exactions of the revenue should be as fairly and equitably distributed as possible, and should fall as lightly as possible upon those who are least able to bear the burden. When the Minister of Finance recently found himself confronted with a deficit, notwithstanding the economy and retrenchment which had been rigidly applied to, if possible, avoid that contingency, he had to consider how the taxation of the country could be increased by upwards of a million dollars, and with the least possible burden to the people. He decided that an additional duty should be placed upon tea, tubing, etc., while at the same time the duty should be altogether taken off from coal oil. The result has shown that Mr. CARTWRIGHT's plan was one worthy the approval of the people. The act of removing the duties on petroleum and its products has had the effect of reducing the cost of that article from 65 cents per gallon, to 35 cents per gallon, and the poor man's lamp now burns just as brightly as before, at about one-half the cost. On the other hand the duty on tea, while sufficient to bring in the required revenue, is so small, being only two cents per pound, that it has not increased the cost of the article an iota. The price of tea has not increased at all, while there are indications from outside reasons that, if it does not fall still lower, it will certainly not advance in the near future. A policy of this kind is certainly entitled to the confidence and support of the people, whose interests are thereby fostered, and whose welfare is considered with paternal care.—Ottawa Free Press.

THE WAR NEWS.

RUSSIA.

The Russians have stopped the manufacture of gas at all Black Sea ports, fearing a conflagration in the event of a bombardment.

The Turkish posts on the Asiatic frontier mostly surrendered without a blow. The Russians find the population in Asia everywhere very friendly. A squadron of irregular cavalry has applied for permission to enter the Russian service, and has surrendered its standard.

Russia has declared the navigation of the Danube reopened, subject to certain local restrictions.

A despatch from Moscow announces that preparations on the largest scale are making for the reception of the Czar. Numerous large private donations have been made on behalf of the wounded Russians.

TURKEY.

May 1.—Hobart Pasha's steamer Bethmo ran the blockade at Galatz by keeping close to the shore while in front of the Russian batteries, and the gunners were unable to depress their pieces far enough to take aim. Admiral Hobar Pasha, of the Turkish navy, was the most successful blockade runner during the late American rebellion. He was then employed by a wealthy English house.

Mr. Layard has advised the Sultan not to unfold the Prophet's Standard, as it would end all attempts to localize the war. The Sultan has declared that he will not unfurl the Standard of the Prophet to arouse Ottoman feeling until all other means of defence have failed.

In Constantinople, the press law of 1865 was suspended, and newspapers are now placed altogether under administrative control.

May 4.—Fifty shots were exchanged between the Russian batteries at Ibrail and a Turkish turret ship and gunboat. The Russian batteries and town were uninjured. The object of the Turks was to ascertain the strength and position of the batteries. A torpedo depot has been

HALIFAX, N. S., May 4.—The forts in the neighbourhood of the city are being supplied with improved guns and ammunition and much activity displayed by the military authorities in a quiet way. Three iron clads are to be stationed here and another regiment of soldiers, the 42nd Highlanders, is expected.

The directors of the public schools in Stratford have consented to have German introduced as a branch of study for the scholars.

GRAVENHURST, May 3.—A joint stock company, composed of some of the leading men, will commence sinking a shaft to-morrow for the purpose of thoroughly testing the value of the rich gold deposits in this place. The work will be conducted under the superintendence of a miner of experience both in California and British Columbia. Fresh finds are being made every day.

The banking institutions in Quebec will employ a private detective on their own account, and have made overtures to one of those going out of employment by the disbandment of the police force. 100 applications have been received by the clerk of the police board from men anxious to be engaged upon the city police force, which has been disbanded owing to a difference of opinion between the men and Police Commissioners as to the rate of wages, the former being willing to continue on at the old rate, $1.25 per day, and the Commissioners offering only $1. The conduct of both the Government and City Corporation in connection with the matter is severely criticized.

Chaudiere mill-owners and lumber men are disheartened at the prospect of the Spring drive; the water in the tributary streams of the Ottawa has not been so low at this season for many years past. Unless the May showers come down in torrents a considerable lot of timber and logs will be stuck. The Chaudiere men have about half a season's supply cut on hand only. The large mill of Messrs. Gilmour & Co., at Hull, is to be closed down all Summer. This mill generally furnished employment for some 200 men.

AMERICAN.

Governor Hendricks, in San Francisco, says earnestly:—"There is a growing sentiment that Hayes is little better than a usurper. He was not elected and his attempt to propitiate the Democracy by adopting Tilden's course, will be unsuccessful. The Democratic party does not want such converts."

A delegation of prominent Israelites called on the President to ask that he take action similar to that taken by President Grant to protect the Israelites in Roumania. The President expressed his sympathy with the object of the delegation, and said he would use his best efforts to comply with their wishes.

The Democratic Jackson Association unanimously passed resolutions commending the President's policy. One of the speakers said the President had done as much to harmonize the interests of the country and to promote prosperity as could have been expected from a Democratic President.

Statistics of trade between the United States, and Russia, and Turkey show that our commerce will be but slightly affected by the closing of the ports of the last two countries, though indirectly this will give an increased demand for our breadstuffs.

Forty millions worth of gold has been coined since last July, and the aggregate of gold and silver coinage is the greatest ever done in the country during the same period. The accumulation of gold in the United States during the current year will probably be greater than during any previous year of its history. It may exceed fifty millions.

INFORMATION ABOUT M. P. P.

From the Winnipeg Free Press. Being in confinement, receipt of an intending settler, making an inquiry regarding Manitoba, Northwest—all of which we answer as far as practicable—the appended have been selected for publication likely to be of value to many other sides those for whom they are especially prepared.

Price of Government lands is 1 acre, cash.

Half-bred scrip, good for 16 (quarter section) of Dominion land worth at present from $15 to $11, depending upwards.

Unimproved lands, within twenty miles of Winnipeg, held by parties, are worth from $2 to 1 acre.

River farmers on the Assiniboine Red rivers, the size of which is generally six chains by four miles (nearly two hundred acres) are held at all prices, owing to location and improvements. In a few miles of Winnipeg as four thousand dollars may be while far away a few hundred dollars buy the same sized lot—averaging $5 per acre.

Any person eighteen years of age entitled to 160 acres free for a homestead, to pre-empt (purchase upon year's credit at one dollar and another 160 acres of Dominion Quarter section (160 acres) of pair can also be obtained for tree-plant.

There are considerable quantities of land within the Province yet of homesteading, etc., but in the meantime.

Persons with money would, as do better to purchase lands either the half-bred reserves (many of will be in the market at once), or of private holders in good positions, to go any considerable distance from meat to get land free.

The question "What is the best way in which to settle?" is one that every person in the country would answer differently. It is a noticeable very commendatory feature of a country that every man thinks he tied in the very best place.

Homesteaders are required to upon their homesteads for three years.

Starting from Ontario for Manitoba there is a choice of routes as by the lakes via Duluth and rail Paul. The former is slightly the better, but the latter more expeditious every case immigrants should get tickets, which can be obtained at every railway station in Ontario. Second-class rates will be from $20 to $30; first-class from $50. Each passenger is entitled 10 pounds baggage.

It will not pay for settlers to heavy articles, such as stoves and rural implements. Many of the in use in the eastern Provinces, adapted to this country.

The Dominion Government assist people to migrate from one province to another.

THE WAR A CANADIAN VI

The Monetary Times says: "The has raised prices when we have to sell; but as the English harvest is to be a bad one this year, a outflow from the East of Europe is seriously checked by continued dances on the very fields and road and through which the Western are supplied, our next harvest cannot be worth much beyond an average. But should we have little to spare increased price of grain will be but a benefit, as our local market price driven up and the whole population saddled with an increase in the living without any compensatory advantage, except to the farming community."

THE EXPRESS.

NAPANEE, MAY 11th, 1877.

Mr. Cartwright has introduced a Bill enacting that hereafter the Canadian fiscal year shall commence on the 31st of March, instead of the 1st of July and 30th June respectively. The new arrangement is to take effect from the beginning of the present month. The reason given for the change is that the great bulk, both of the receipts and expenditure of the Government, takes place during these months, and great inconvenience has been experienced in the preparation, both of the estimates and of the public accounts, from the transaction of one such season being divided between two financial years.

THE PROHIBITORY PROBLEM still agitates the local statesman of Massachusetts. The bill now under discussion is of the copper-bottomed kind. It permits the sale of cider for "other purposes than that of a beverage," if anybody knows what such purposes are, but prohibits ale, porter, beer and wines of all kinds. Manufacture for export is permitted, but no quantity less than thirty gallons can be exported. The penalty for the first violations of the law for selling is ten dollars and twenty to thirty days' imprisonment; for the second, twenty dollars and thirty to sixty days; and for all subsequent violations, fifty dollars and three to six months' imprisonment, with thirty days additional when fine and costs are not paid. Carriers are subjected to a fine of one hundred dollars.

Whilst it is commonly known that most of our early vegetables come from the United States, it may be new to some to hear that Canada is the first in the New York markets with some spring delicacies. In the course of an article on early vegetables, the New York Sun states that the first supply of mushrooms and rhubarb comes from Colonel Rhodes, farm, near Quebec. These succulent vegetables are raised by the Colonel in underground galleries, twenty feet below the surface, and kept perfectly dark. The Sun says that the rhubarb is the finest ever seen in New York, and commands thirty cents per pound. It is shipped in boxes of forty pounds, each stalk being wrapped in tissue paper. The mushroom sell for $1 a pound.

that preparations on the largest scale are making for the reception of the Czar. Numerous large private donations have been made on behalf of the wounded Russians.

TURKEY.

May 1.—Hobart Pasha's steamer Rethmo ran the blockade at Galatz by keeping close to the shore while in front of the Russian batteries, and the gunners were unable to depress their pieces far enough to take aim. May 4.—Fifty shots were exchanged between the Russian batteries at Ibrail and a Turkish turret ship and gunboat. The Russian batteries and town were uninjured. The object of the Turks was to ascertain the strength and position of the batteries. A torpedo depot has been established at the mouth of the Pruth. Six hundred engineers and sailors constitute the torpedo detachment there.

The Turkish forces in Armenia, number 127,000 including Militia and Circassians.

THE BATTLE OF KARS.

May 2.—The centre of the Russian army, 40,000 strong, under Melnikoff, attacked Mukhtar, five miles from Kars, on April 29th. The Turks fought desperately, and the Russians, supported by a powerful artillery, succeeded in dislodging them from their position. Mukhtar called on his reserves, and attempted on April 30th to recover lost ground with 60,000 men, but was defeated and driven back under the guns of Kars. The Russian losses were considerable and those of the Turks enormous.

ENGLAND'S POSITION.

Recruiting has been progressing so briskly lately that nearly every regiment in the service is full. The military artificers at Woolwich arsenal were excused yesterday from the monthly muster and parade because of pressing work, on the preparation of waggons and ambulances, etc.

The 29th regiment stationed at Chatham has been ordered to be made up to its war strength of 900 men.

The British Government is chagrined at the development of the Russian policy which seems to be not to push the war on the Danube, but to make Asiatic Turkey the real point of attack, relieving Russia from all embarrassments from other Cabinets in Europe excepting England, whose interests in India and Egypt are directly menaced.

LONDON, May 2.—The Telegraph, in a leading article, points to the omission from the declaration of neutrality issued by the British Government on Monday of the following paragraph, which appeared in the declaration issued at the outbreak of the Franco-German war:—"We are firmly purposed and determined to abstain from taking any part, directly or indirectly, in the war now unhappily existing between two sovereigns and to maintain peaceful and friendly intercourse with each of them."

ST. PETERSBURG, May 2.—The British Minister has notified the Russian Government that the Porte has abandoned the idea of placing Turkish subjects in Russia under British protection. The Government replied that the Turks would nevertheless continue to receive the protection of the laws.

The son of Schamiyl, the Circassian chieftain, was expected to take command of the Circassians, who, however, refuse to submit to military organization.

The Permanent Exhibition in Philadelphia was opened on May 10th in the main Centennial building with inaugural ceremonies, attended by the President, members of the Cabinet, Gen. Grant, and the Governor of the State. A grand farewell reception to Gen. Grant will be given on May 15th. The municipal authorities will tender the freedom of the city, and Independence Hall will be opened for his public reception.

Two hundred and fifty employees of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, principally females, were discharged today.

A driver of the New York Transfer Company received a trunk for delivery. He drove to the company's stable, leaving the trunk in the wagon while taking dinner. He then delivered it to the owner, who discovered that $53,000 worth of diamonds were stolen.

BRITAIN.

A significant scene was witnessed at the Plymouth Guildhall recently. It was crowded by an audience of 2,000 persons on the occasion of a charity concert, and the last item on the programme was the Russian National Anthem, played by the band and sung by the chorus. Prior to its performance, a Conservative peer and his family rose and left, and were followed by several others. The bulk of the audience remained and rose in honour of the anthem, and a few who kept their seats were loudly hissed. The scene caused much excitement.

The shipwrights in the Glasgow district of the Clyde persisting in their strike, the shipbuilders have resolved to lock-out their men, therefore 1,400 who did not strike have been thrown out of employment.

It has been decided by four of the leading steamship companies at Liverpool that in consequence of the unexampled depression of commerce, a depression which shows no signs of termination, the sailings of their steamers shall be decreased by one half. The Guion, White Star, Inman, and National steamers, which have been despatched every week will now be despatched every fortnight. This arrangement will continue for three months, in the hope that trade, both in England and America, will undergo sufficient improvement to warrant a return to the weekly sailings.

The Cuban planters have planned a scheme for importing Chinese labourers. The capital for the purpose if fixed at two millions, half of which has already been subscribed.

Spring! Spring! JOYOUS SPRING!

has again opened upon us, and so has your friend

H. BOYLE,

after a hard winter, in

Wm. Miller's Old Stand

HALIFAX, N. S., May 4.—The forts in the neighbourhood of the city are being supplied with improved guns and ammunition and much activity is displayed by the military authorities in a quiet way.

Three iron clads are to be stationed here and another regiment of soldiers, the 42nd Highlanders, is expected to arrive.

The directors of the public schools in Stratford have consented to have German introduced as a branch of study for the scholars.

GRAVENHURST, May 3.—A joint stock company, composed of some of the leading men, will commence sinking a shaft to-morrow for the purpose of thoroughly testing the value of the rich gold deposits in this place. The work will be conducted under the superintendence of a miner of experience both in California and British Columbia. Fresh finds are being made every day.

The banking institutions in Quebec will employ a private detective on their own account, and have made overtures to one of those going out of employment by the disbandment of the police force. 100 applications have been received by the clerk of the police board from men anxious to be engaged upon the city police force, which has been disbanded owing to a difference of opinion between the men and Police Commissioners as to the rate of wages, the former being willing to continue on at the old rate, $1.25 per day, and the Commissioners offering only $1. The conduct of both the Government and City Corporation in connection with the matter is severely criticized.

Chaudiere mill-owners and lumber men are heartened at the prospect of the Spring drive; the water in the tributary streams of the Ottawa has not been so low at this season for many years past. Unless the May showers come down in torrents a considerable lot of timber and logs will be stuck. The Chaudiere men have about half a season's supply out on hand only. The large mill of Messrs. Gilmour & Co., at Hull, is to be closed down all Summer. This will generally furnish employment for some 200 men.

AMERICAN.

Governor Hendricks, in San Francisco, says earnestly:—"There is a growing sentiment that Hayes is little better than a usurper. He was not elected and his attempt to prostrate the Democracy by adopting Tilden's course, will be unsuccessful. The Democratic party does not want such converts."

A delegation of prominent Israelites called on the President to ask that he take action similar to that taken by President Grant to protect the Israelites in Roumania. The President expressed his sympathy with the object of the delegation, and said he would use his best efforts to comply with their wishes.

The Democratic Jackson Association unanimously passed resolutions commending the President's policy. One of the speakers said the President had done as much to harmonize the interests of the country and to promote prosperity as could have been expected from a Democratic President.

Statistics of trade between the United States, and Russia, and Turkey show that our commerce will be but slightly affected by the closing of the ports of the last two countries, though indirectly this will give an increased demand for our breadstuffs.

Forty millions worth of gold has been coined since last July, and the aggregate of gold and silver coinage is the greatest ever done in the country during the same period. The accumulation of gold in the United States during the current year will probably be greater than during any previous year of its history. It may

INFORMATION ABOUT MANITOBA.

(From the Winnipeg Free-Press.)
Being in continued receipt of letters from intending settlers, making all sorts of inquiries regarding Manitoba and the Northwest—all of which we answer as far as practicable—the appended answers have been selected for publication, as likely to be of value to many others besides those for whom they are especially prepared.

Price of Government lands is $1 per acre, cash.
Half-bred scrip, good, for 160 acre (quarter section) of Dominion lands, is worth at present from $115 to $125, and tending upwards.

Unimproved lands, within twelve to twenty miles of Winnipeg, held by private parties, are worth from $2 to $4 an acre.

River farmers on the Assiniboine and Red rivers, the size of which is generally six chains by four miles (nearly two hundred acres) are held at all prices, according to location and improvements. Within a few miles of Winnipeg as high as four thousand dollars may be asked, while far away a few hundred dollars will buy the same sized lot—averaging about $5 per acre.

Any person eighteen years of age is entitled to 160 acres free for a homestead, and to pre-empt (purchase upon three years' credit at one dollar and acre) another 160 acres of Dominion lands. Quarter section (160 acres) of prairie land can also be obtained for tree-planting.

There are considerable quantities of land within the Province yet open for homesteading, etc., but in the more remote parts.

Persons with money would, as a rule, do better to purchase lands either within the half-bred reserves (many of which will be in the market at once), or of other private holders in good positions, than to go any considerable distance from settlement to get land free.

The question "What is the best locality in which to settle?" is one that almost every person in the country would answer differently. It is a noticeable, but very recommendatory, feature of the country that every man thinks he is settled in the very best place.

Homesteaders are required to reside upon their homesteads for three years.

Starting from Ontario for Manitoba there is a choice of routes as between the lakes via Duluth and rail via St. Paul. The former is slightly the cheaper, but the latter more expeditious. In every case immigrants should get through tickets, which can be obtained at almost every railway station in Ontario and Quebec. Second-class rates will likely be from $20 to $30; first-class from $45 to $50. Each passenger is entitled to 100 pounds baggage.

It will not pay for settlers to bring heavy articles, such as stoves and agricultural implements. Many of the latter, in use in the eastern Provinces, are not adapted to this country.

The Dominion Government do not assist people to migrate from one Province to another.

THE WAR A CANADIAN VIEW.

The Monetary Times says:—"The war has raised prices when we have nothing to sell; but as the English harvest promises to be a bad one this year, and the outflow from the East of Europe must be seriously checked by continued disturbances on the very fields and roads from and through which the Western markets are supplied, our next harvest cannot but be worth much beyond an average. But should we have little to spare, the increased price of grain will be but a partial benefit, as our local market prices will be driven up and the whole population scolded with an increase in the cost of

FOREIGN.

BRITAIN.

A significant scene was witnessed at the Plymouth Guildhall recently. It was crowded by an audience of 2,000 persons on the occasion of a charity concert, and the last item on the programme was the Russian National Anthem, played by the band and sung by the chorus. Prior to its performance, a Conservative peer and his family rose and left, and were followed by several others. The bulk of the audience remained and rose in honour of the anthem, and a few who kept their seats were loudly hissed. The scene caused much excitement.

The shipwrights in the Glasgow district of the Clyde persisting in their strike, the shipbuilders have resolved to lock-out their men, therefore 1,400 who did not strike have been thrown out of employment.

It has been decided by four of the leading steamship companies at Liverpool that in consequence of the unexampled depression of commerce, a depression which shows no signs of termination, the sailings of their steamers shall be decreased by one half. The Guion, White Star, Inman, and National steamers, which have been despatched every week will now be despatched every fortnight. This arrangement will continue for three months, in the hope that trade, both in England and America, will undergo sufficient improvement to warrant a return to the weekly sailings.

THE TREATIES OF ANY VALUE?

The London Standard asks:—"Is there public law in Europe? Have treaties been made by all the Great Powers any light or meaning? Is there any binding force in the signature of powerful and ostensibly moral sovereigns? Have treaties a conscience, a sentiment of duty, a sense of obligation? Unless all these questions have to be answered in the negative, Russia is without excuse for attacking Turkey, and mankind will yet be treated to the spectacle of war. We do not know with what season we can ever again see any State to sign a treaty, or with any face any other State can invite its ruler into a public compact, if Russia suffered without restraint to act as she has not pledged herself to gland, to France, to Germany, to Austria, to Italy, to submit her controversies with Turkey to their mediation. Recovery, it is almost physically impossible for Russia to attack Turkey in Europe, unless the neutrality of Romania be violated; and the neutrality of Romania cannot be violated except by violation of public law. What is the of signing treaties is they are not to be observed?"

Notice to Subscribers!

A misunderstanding with some of our subscribers, has arisen in regard to the meaning conveyed by the wording of certain circulars, sent to them by Mr. T. W. Casey, late proprietor of the Express, asking for payment of arrears of subscriptions. We wish it distinctly understood, that Mr. Casey's connection with the Express, expired on the 16th day of October 1876, and all subscriptions due him, expired with that date. We hope that our subscribers will not infer from the said circulars, that we are, at this early date, pushing them for their subscriptions.

Advice to Railway Conductors.

Good and sensible customs, wherever found, are worthy of adoption. For example: On a certain New Jersey railroad, a short time before the train reaches each station, the conductor or brakeman opens the door of each car, and says, in a clear, distinct voice, "The next station will be Newark," or whatever the next place may be. This is a most pleasant contrast to the usual mode, when the door is suddenly opened amid the jar, noise, and confusion of the stopping train, and an unintelligible word is shouted out, leaving strangers to the locality in complete ignorance, and necessitating enquiries to ascertain if they have reached their own destination. Some such simple improvements in the management of railroad trains could render travelling much more comfortable than it is at present.

The Mail of the 3rd inst contains the following:—"Last evening Mr. W. K. Pruyne, who has for the last four years filled the position of manager of the wareroom of Messrs. Adam, Stevenson, & Co., was entertained at an oyster and champagne supper at the St. Nicholas restaurant, by a number of his friends, on the occasion of his departure from this city to take up his abode in Napanee. After the cloth had been removed speeches appropriate to the occasions were made, and a pleasant hour was spent. Mr. Pruyne takes with him the good wishes of a host of Toronto friends." He has become established as a citizen of Napanee, and a partner in the grocery business formerly conducted by Mr. J. R. Pruyne.

Real Estate Sale.

That valuable town property, built, and lately occupied by Mr. R. G. Wright, on East street, will be sold by Public Auction, at the Town Hall on the 26th, inst. This property is without exception, unequalled, as regards the excellence of construction, and completeness in detail, without and within. The material and workmanship are of the very best. The inside being finished in hard wood, and supplied with every necessary modern convenience, including gas and water. The drainage is perfect, and the outbuildings, stables and driving sheds are on a corresponding scale of neatness and durability.

Alleged Violation of the By-Law.

Frank H. Priest of Bath, was on Tuesday charged by the Inspector, with selling liquor without a license. The case was tried before Mayor Williams and Mr. Chas. James, Mr. Reeve for the prosecution and Mr. Preston for the defence. John Lemon and Lemuel Irons, testified that they purchased alcohol from the defendant on the 2nd of May, for medicinal purposes. The Inspector Boyle testified that a registration of these sales had not been made. Mr. Priest testified that he had kept a careful register of all liquors sold for medicinal purposes, and he understood that a registration of sales of pure alcohol was not required. Mr. Preston said that as pure alcohol was not a beverage—not a drinkable liquid—it did not come within the meaning of the statute. Mr. Reeve claimed that it did else the law could be evaded by public houses selling alcohol. Judgement was reserved. All druggists sell and prescribe alcohol professionally, and it is plain, from the evidence, that Mr. Priest did not violate the law, if he did, such violation hangs upon a mere technicality in regard to the matter of registration. We hope he will be acquitted.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

An adjourned meeting of the Board of Education was held on Tuesday evening.

Mr. Lane presented the report of the special Committee, recommending the acceptance of W. Aythart's tender for the West ward janitorship, at $180, free house and wood, and of Trayton Pearson's for the East ward, at $100, house and wood himself. The duties in each case, to be as advertised. Received, adopted and carried.

Mr. Morden presented the report of the special Committee in the Suspension case, stating that the evidence was so pointed as to warrant the expulsion of the boy Sills, that he was expelled for a serious offence, that when the copy-books were shown one belonging to Master E. Daly, was missing, and subsequently Daley admitted that he was the guilty party. The Committee made no recommendation claiming that they had been superceded by the teachers who had taken action. Received and adopted.

Mr. Matheson said that Sills had been reinstated and Daley suspended.

It was agreed that Daley should be readmitted upon making a public apology to the teacher and Master E Sills whom he had wronged.

An account of T. Pearson for night watching, nineteen nights at 50c. per night, $9.50, was paid.

The Board adjourned.

A regular meeting of the Council on Monday night, 7th inst.

THE ASSESSMENT ROLL.

The Clerk laid the Assessment Rolls for 1877 on the table. The Mayor introduced a by-law to appoint a Court of Revision, which was read a first time. The council then went into Committee of the Whole on the second reading. Mr. Roe in the chair, when it was moved by Mr. James, seconded by Mr. Fralick and carried, that the Court consist of five members. Moved by Mr. Williams, second by Mr. Joy, that Messrs. James, Herring, Roe, McNeil and Lane, be the Court at Revision carried.

The 28th inst, at 10 a. m. was fixed for the first meeting of the court and the clerk was instructed to give the proper notice. The by-law was read a third time and finally passed.

FINANCE REPORT.

Mr. James presented the report of the Finance Committee recommending the payment of $15 to Dr. Clark in full of all demands, $15 each to the auditors of the accounts of 1876, $1.95 to T. Symington for one and refreshment for Fireman.

THE DANGER TO CANADA

If it be true that three iron clads were ordered by England to watch the movements of the Russian navy lying in American waters, it is a lay the apprehensions of our down by the sounding sea. In the of Britain being drawn into the the East, Russian cruisers would position to inflict no end of damage Canadian commerce. During war, in which England and Russia opposed to each other: the arman Great Britain were allied to the ments of France, and the combin of the two sufficed to keep the fleet at home. Whether France would be drawn into the conflict to be seen, but it is certain that the hush fleet alone is quite inadequate vent that of Russia from going soever it pleased. The British force has of late been chiefly on a small number of very power clads, which, apart from their number, are not adapted for cruise the event of war between the two tries, the manifest policy of Russia be to divert the attention of Great and, as far as possible, to withhold British forces from the East. The effectual way of accomplishing this would be for Russia to send cruisers over to this side of the Atlantic as she has done, and possibly to A. The least evil that could result to such proceedings would be the tion of our carrying trade. A Russian cruiser could cut off the who trade and leaves with no commu with the outside world except through United States. The destruction carrying trade would be a heavy but there is really no limit to the which we might sustain by activation upon our frontiers by the naval power. The condition of risons at Quebec and Halifax is as to oppose any serious obstacle fleet of Russian ironclads. It is the old story of the whale and the fish. The guns at Quebec are in unsatisfactory condition, and the ents at Halifax are obsolete and cient, as has frequently been pointed by the Maritime press. In addition the damage apt to be inflicted by cruisers we might possibly be call provide against Fenian incursions privateers under the Russian flag in turn might lead to complications the United States. If Halifax be led with a superior fleet, British would have lost the prestige under Nelson if they could not of Russian ships.—Telegraph.

The drainage is perfect, and the outbuildings, stables and driving sheds are on a corresponding scale of neatness, durability and taste. All the particulars respecting terms &c. are set forth in Messrs. Deroche & Maddens advertisement on our second page.

Charivari.

A well-known gentleman, living on the hill at the east end of the foot-bridge, in the happy land of "Canaan," having entered on the second stage of his matrimonial existence, was on Monday night treated to an old-fashioned Charivari. About forty rascals, with faces blackened, and so well disguised as to defy recognition, filed along Water street on their way to the battle field, where they gave popular selections upon every known musical instrument, including solos on the tin-pan which drowned the whole neighborhood. Pistol shots varied the monotony, and the chorus invariably wound up with an Indian war-whoop, that would have excited the envy and ambition of a Sioux savage. And yet, the recipient of all these honors, did not pan out worth a cent. The brave policeman—as usual—witnessed the scene from a distance, not wishing to risk their heads in an encounter with the outlaws. The whole party finally left the happy pair to dream of future bliss, and gave the sleepless neighbors a chance to get an hour's rest before morning.

We expect all past due accounts to be settled up. DAVIS & BRO.

FINANCE REPORT.

Mr. James presented the report of the Finance Committee recommending the payment of $15 to Dr. Clark in full of all demands, $15 each to the auditors of the accounts of 1876, $1.95 to T. Symington for rope and refreshment for Fireman, that the West Ward Collector's Roll for 1875 be not received, that Wm. McMullen had been notified, but had failed to meet the committee or return his roll, that the auditor's report had been found correct, and that it be published in one of the town newspapers.

The report was taken up seriatim. Moved by Mr. Geddes and seconded, that the first clause be adopted. Mr. Roe objected on the ground that no legal claim existed. Mr. Herring explained that it had been proven that Dr. Clark attended the small-pox patients for 13 days, and that he had, at least for one day, the authority of the Board of Health for so doing. The claim had been reduced from $42 to $15 in order to obtain a settlement. If it was sued for, judgment would be obtained for one day any way and the town would have to pay the costs.

After some discussion the clause was adopted.

The second and third clauses were adopted, the fourth and fifth were deferred, and the remainder adopted.

THE GAS LAMPS.

Mr. Miller presented the report of the Town Property Committee, stating that 51 hours had been lost between the 16th and 28th April, and recommending the discontinuance of lighting until a satisfactory agreement was made.

After discussion it was resolved, that the matter of lighting the street lamps be referred to a committee composed of the Mayor, Mr. James and Mr. Miller, to examine the contract, get an opinion if necessary, and insist upon the rights of the town under the contract.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Departure of the Oswego Belle.

Our pet steamer, under the command of Capt. George Reid, left her dock at 9.30 a. m. on Tuesday for her first trip. She went as far as "Liverpool" where her pilot, mistaking that ancient seaport for a coaling station, suddenly headed for Charley Yeo's melon patch and ran his vessel plump into a sand bank, to the consternation of the captain and his jocular crew, who were at that moment quietly enjoying a box of George Wood's choice Havans. The engines were reversed, and the passing steamer, Shannon solicited for a "bow." After vainly tugging to the imminent risk of bursting his boilers, Capt. Johnson left the Belle to her fate. The boatswain immediately piped all hands on deck, and the genial Capt. Reid, by serving out an extra supply of gr—lemonade, secured the services of two prominent cabin passengers, who made fast a line to the opposite bank, and pulled the boat off by sheer force of muscle, the air ringing with shouts from the assembled natives on shore. She now proceeded on her voyage without further mishap. She left Belleville on Tuesday evening with 100 head of cattle belonging to H. Corby jr, which were conveyed to Charlotte, from thence, they go by rail to Philadelphia, and by ship to England. For the remainder of the season the Belle will run her usual route between Belleville and Oswego.

The Sidonian proceeded under sail, and will not arrive at her destination under two weeks.

THE MORMON EXCITEMENT.

That the mormons apprehended the arrest of Brigham Young and other head of the Church, owing to the accusation contained in Lee's confession has been already mentioned by telegraph. A significant order has become public. "Col Dame one of the chiefs men indicted to participation in the Mountain Meadow slaughter,—has issued a regimental order to the officers of the Mormon infantry calling for a muster drill and inspection on the 21st day of April, 1877, also, to fill up vacancies, elect officers, enroll all persons liable to military duty, and report to head quarters.

Preparations for hostilities are particularly active among the southern settlements, to which four boxes of breech loading rifles were shipped last week from the co-operative store in Salt Lake City.

Night meetings and drills of squads of Mormons are going on in Salt Lake City itself, and some of these proceedings are conducted within an inclosure, in the immediate vicinity of Lion House, where Brigham Young resides.

Brigham Young has boldly asserted within the past few days that the Mormons, who have been driven so often and so far, will be driven no longer. It remains to be seen how far General Emery Governor of Utah, will suffer these seditious preparations to go.

CUSTOMS REGULATIONS IN N. Y.

As part of the scheme for the regulation of the abuses alleged in connection with the Custom House affairs in New York, Secretary Sherman has issued regulations covering the discharge of the steamships at night, and the compensation of the inspector therefor. To continue the discharge of cargo after sunset a special license must be obtained, and the inspectors shall receive a dollar per hour for such extra service; which must be paid to the collector by the vessel owners. Any Customs officer who shall receive extra compensation, except such as is allowed by law, shall be dismissed

Alleged Violation of the By-Law.

Frank H. Priest of Bath, was on Tuesday charged by the Inspector, with selling liquor without a license. The case was tried before Mayor Williams and Mr. Chas. James, Mr. Reeve for the prosecution and Mr. Preston for the defence. John Lemon and Lemuel Irons testified that they purchased alcohol from the defendant on the 2nd of May, for medicinal purposes. Inspector Hogle testified that a registration of these sales had not been made. Mr. Priest testified that he had kept a careful register of all liquors sold for medicinal purposes, and he understood that a registration of sales of pure alcohol was not required. Mr. Preston said that as pure alcohol was not a beverage—not a drinkable liquid—it did not come within the meaning of the statute. Mr. Reeve claimed that it did else the law could be avoided by public houses selling alcohol. Judgement was reserved. All druggists sell and prescribe alcohol professionally, and it is plain, from the evidence, that Mr. Priest did not violate the law, if he did, such violation hangs upon a mere technicality in regard to the matter of registration. We hope he will be acquitted.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

An adjourned meeting of the Board of Education was held on Tuesday evening.

Mr. Lane presented the report of the special Committee, recommending the acceptance of W. Ayhart's tender for the West ward janitorship, at $180, free house and wood, and of Trayton Pearson's for the East ward, at $100, house and wood himself. The duties in each case, to be as advertised. Received, adopted and carried.

Mr. Morden presented the report of the special Committee in the Suspension case, stating that the evidence was so pointed as to warrant the expulsion of the boy Sills, that he was expelled for a serious offence, that when the copy-books were shown one belonging to Master E. Daly, was missing, and subsequently Daly admitted that he was the guilty party. The Committee made no recommendation claiming that they had been preceded by the teachers who had taken action. Received and adopted.

Mr. Matheson said that Sills had been reinstated and Daly suspended. It was agreed that Daly should be readmitted upon making a public apology to the teacher and Master E. Sills whom he had wronged.

An account of T. Pearson for night watching, nineteen nights at 50c. per night, $9.50, was paid.

The Board adjourned.

A regular meeting of the Council on Monday night, 7th inst.

THE ASSESSMENT ROLL.

The Clerk laid the Assessment Rolls for 1877 on the table. The Mayor introduced a by-law to appoint a Court of Revision, which was read a first time. The council then went into Committee of the Whole on the second reading. Mr. Roe in the chair, when it was moved by Mr. James, seconded by Mr. Malick and carried, that the Court consist of five members. Moved by Mr. Williams, second by Mr. Joy, that Messrs. James, Herring, Roe, McNeill and Lane, be the Court of Revision.

The 28th inst, at 10 a. m. was fixed for the first meeting of the court and the clerk was instructed to give the proper notice. The by-law was read a third time and finally passed.

THE DANGER TO CANADA.

If it be true that three iron clads have been ordered by England to Halifax to watch the movements of the Russian fleet now lying in American waters, it will allay the apprehensions of our brethren down by the sounding sea. In the event of Britain being drawn into the war in the East, Russian cruisers would be in a position to inflict no end of damage on Canadian commerce. During the last war, in which England and Russia were opposed to each other, the armaments of Great Britain were allied to the armaments of France, and the combined fleets of the two sufficed to keep the Russian fleet at home. Whether France will eventually be drawn into the conflict remains to be seen, but it is certain that the English fleet alone is quite inadequate to prevent that of Russia from going withersoever it pleased. The British naval force has of late been chiefly confined to a small number of very powerful iron clads, which, apart from their limited number, are not adapted for cruising. In the event of war between the two countries, the manifest policy of Russia would be to divert the attention of Great Britain and, as far as possible, to withdraw the British forces from the East. The most effectual way of accomplishing that object would be for Russia to send her cruisers over to this side of the Atlantic, as she has done, and possibly to Australia. The least evil that could result to us from such proceedings would be the destruction of our carrying trade. A single Russian cruiser could cut off the whole of our trade and leave us with no communication with the outside world except through the United States. The destruction of our carrying trade would be a heavy blow, but there is really no limit to the injury which we might sustain by active aggression upon our frontiers by the Russian naval power. The condition of our garisons at Quebec and Halifax is not such as to oppose any serious obstacles to a fleet of Russian ironclads. It would be the old story of the whale and the swordfish. The guns at Quebec are in a very unsatisfactory condition, and the armaments at Halifax are obsolete and insufficient, as has frequently been pointed out by the Maritime press. In addition to the damage apt to be inflicted by Russian cruisers we might possibly be called on to provide against Fenian incursions and privateers under the Russian flag, which in turn might lead to complications with the United States. If Halifax be provided with a superior fleet, British soldiers would have lost the prestige acquired under Nelson if they could not dispose of Russian ships.—Telegram.

BRITAIN AND CANADA.

CANADIAN LOYALTY TRULY APPRECIATED.

LONDON, May 2.—The papers notice a cablegram stating that the Toronto Field Battery have volunteered for active service. The Daily Telegraph, in an editorial on Canada, speaks of the announcement as one which may come to mean a great deal though it be brief and unassuming. It says: "Canadians are not only able to supply their own military force for home defence, but are able to spare us a field battery complete if we should require it for active service. That is to offer, never mind where. Since the gallant Canadians make no limit they would doubtless fight enemies of England's interests and rights in any climate or on any continent, whatever uniform they may chance to wear, and under whatever pretext they may seek to assail her. There is the symptom that marks a staunch community feeling between the children of the same mighty mother, the heirs of one ample heritage. Virtual political independence has not produced alienation, but has only strengthened the ties that bind distant kinsmen to the British Crown, in bonds of sympathy

TERRIBLE CATASTROPHE.

LANDSLIDE—SEVERAL PERSONS KILLED.

MONTREAL, May 5.—A terrible accident has occurred on the Riviere Vielle near St. Genevieve, occasioned by a landslide, half a mile above the mill at St. Genevieve there were two hills, one of them was eighty feet high. These, about ten o'clock on Tuesday forenoon, suddenly collapsed, settling down into the river. The slimy clay as slippery as soft soap, ran with inconceivable rapidity down the river bed, throwing up the water before it as a wall, growing higher at every yard till on reaching the mill dam, it appeared as a solid wall of water twenty feet high. It poised over the dam, struck the mill, and carried it and those in it away. There were at the mill at the time nine persons; Mrs. Lannouette and her three children, who were in the house adjoining the mill, her husband who was in the mill; his assistant, Ferdinand Gervais, aged sixteen, who saw the water coming; Mr. Cloutier, an old man, who was loading his waggon with grain, and Mr. Massicotte, the owner of the mill, who had just arrived, and was unhitching his horses. The crash of the mountain and rush of the torrent were heard over the neighborhood, and caused great consternation. But soon the cause was discovered, and the neighbors began the search for the bodies. The first found was that of Elenor Lannouette, a little girl three years old, who was found in the water three-quarters of a mile below the mill. A few yards lower down the stream, her little sister, two years old, was found. A few yards further on was the body of the mother aged 21. A few feet farther on still was the body of Mr. Cloutier. There was in the house at the time of the accident the little girl, a month and a half old, whose body has not yet been found.

LATER.—It is now positively known that ten persons were buried alive, six in the mill and four in the house an acre away; seven bodies have been recovered. The bodies were hardly recognizable. In one room the mother and her youngest child found, half their bodies in the water, sitting on a chair—literally buried alive.

OTHER FATAL LAND SLIDES.

Fifty years ago, on a river near Champlain, there was a landslide much larger than the present one, in which over a hundred acres of land slipped from its moorings. In the same neighborhood eight years ago there was another land slide, by which eight houses were taken away.

ALLEGED CAUSES.

The cause of the late catastrophe has been attributed to certain cracks which have formed in the side of the hills, about three years ago. These have since been filled with moisture which has frozen, and thawed and frozen again until the support was too weak to hold the immense weight of slippery earth.

A company has been formed in Manchester for establishing temperance public-houses.

on the subject of an "International Anti-us he is about to set on foot. He says:

"When explosive bullets and chain shot
were invented and actually used in war, nations unanimously agreed to discontinue their use and prohibit their manufacture; yet explosive bullets and chain shot, it must be admitted, are harmless as compared with torpedoes, which are actually more subtle and deadly than poison, there being no antidote to or escape from them? It is our bounden duty to keep pace with other countries
but every one will admit that the power
the International Anti-Torpedo Association has accomplished its task the better

BOILER EXPLOSION AT SEA.

Boston, May 6.—The steamship China, arrived from Liverpool, reports that she signalled the steamer Sidonian, of Glasgow, from New York for Bristol, disabled, requiring a surgeon. She sent the ship surgeon on board, who reported that on the 29th the boilers exploded, killing
the captain, three engineers, two firemen,
and one trimmer, and injuring the cook.
The rest of the crew were all well.
When the surgeon of the China went on board, the men were all dead but one fireman. When asked the cause of the explosion he answered, "I will tell you in the morning" but he died in a few min-cause. The Sidonian proceeded under

Preparations for hostilities are particularly active among the southern settlements, to which four boxes of breech-loading rifles were shipped last week from the co-operative store in Salt Lake City.
Night meetings and drills of squads of Mormons are going on in Salt Lake City itself, and some of these proceedings are conducted within an inclosure, in the immediate vicinity of Lion House, where Brigham Young resides.
Brigham Young has boldly asserted within the past few days that the Mormons, who have been driven so often and so far, will be driven no longer. It remains to be seen how far General Emery, Governor of Utah, will suffer these seditionary preparations to go.

TERIBLE CATASTROPHE.
LANDSLIDE—SEVERAL PERSONS KILLED.

MONTREAL, May 5.—A terrible accident occurred on the Riviere Vielle near Genesveve, occasioned by a landslide, a mile above the mill at St. Geneve there were two hills, one of them eighty feet high. These, about ten o'clock on Tuesday forenoon, suddenly slipped, settling down into the river. The slimy clay as slippery as soft soap, with inconceivable rapidity down the river bed, throwing up the water before it, a wall, growing higher at every yard on reaching the mill dam, it appeared solid wall of water twenty feet high. As it passed over the dam, struck the mill, carried it and those in it away. There were at the mill at the time nine persons; Mrs. Lannouette and her three children, who were in the house adjoining the mill, her husband who was in the mill; his assistant, Ferdinand Gervais, sixteen, who saw the water coming; Cloutier, an old man, who was loading his waggon with grain, and Mr. Masse, the owner of the mill, who had arrived, and was unhitching his oxen. The crash of the mountain and of the torrent were heard over the neighborhood, and caused great consternation. But soon the cause was discovered and the neighbors began the search for the bodies. The first found was that of a young girl, a little girl three years old, who was found in the water a quarter of a mile below the mill. A few yards lower down the stream, her sister, two years old, was found. A few yards further on was the body of the boy aged 21. A few feet farther on was the body of Mr. Cloutier. There in the house at the time of the accident the little girl, a month and a half whose body has not yet been found.

OTHER FATAL LAND SLIDES.
A few years ago, on a river near Champthere was a landslide much larger than the present one, in which over a hundred acres of land slipped from its moorings. In the same neighborhood a few years ago there was another landslide by which eight houses were taken

ALLEGED CAUSES.
The cause of the late catastrophe has been attributed to certain cracks which formed in the side of the hills, about ten years ago. These have since been filled with moisture which has frozen, and the ice and frozen again until the support was too weak to hold the immense mass of slippery earth.

A company has been formed in Montreal for establishing temperance societies.

THEIR WORKS YE SHALL KNOW THEM.

An Irishman who thought the drug-stomach because the emetic was so only surpassed in his parsimoniousness by those who persistently refused to the use of those nauseating, stinging large and drastic pills, while Perce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, are sugar-coated, and little larger than mustard seeds, will by their steady gentle action on the liver, correct all biliousness, thus permanently overcoming indigestion. In South America they almost entirely superseded all other medicines and are relied on fully by the natives for the affections of the stomach, liver, bowels, so prevalent in that climate.

ORNAMENTATION OF GARDENS.

With regard to ornamentation generally, "carpenter-architecture," besides being expensive, is altogether out of place in small gardens, although harmonious and agreeable, in the shape of summer-houses and rustic seats, where the grounds are extensive. It is common to see a little garden, with starling flower-beds and a few shrubs, bestridden by an elaborate, expensive edifice miscalled a summer-house, miscalled an arbor, properly called a nuisance. Another popular delusion, that empty urns and vases, painted china seats, ugly statues of mythological deities, are appropriate to square plots of grass and patches of flowers. Suburban gardens are often spotted with these things, which are seldom either ornamental or useful. A rich urn or vase filled with flowers is a beautiful sight, and may sometimes be used with excellent effect, but the right place for it is often an open question.

The ornamental properties of decayed tree-stumps, and even of half barrels sunk in the ground and covered with strips of bark, are too well known to require particular mention; but a rustic wall-pocket against some grand old tree is not so common, and may be made a thing of beauty with trailing vines and bright clusters of bloom. Our motto would be vines, vines everywhere; and a curving in-gate with a light trellis-work over it, for graceful climbers, is almost ornamental addition to the entrance-grounds. For a purpose like this the beautiful Clematis Jacksonii is scarcely so well known as it should be; and the fiery autumn blushes of the Virginia creeper touch up with just the right line of color the passé charms of summer verging into fall.

But, whatever else the owner of a small garden may see fit to do, let him not, as Mr. Wegg would put it, "drop into" statuary. Staring plaster-casts, unless veiled and draped with abundant green are positively hideous; and those who are most given to displaying them in small, unshaded spaces would probably return the Venus of Milo, after ordering it, like an Oriental bride, without seeing it, in fuming indignation at a broken and mutilated "figger," instead of the perfect Greek statue expected and paid for. Mr. Lowell says "it is only in such a climate" (that of Italy) "that it does not seem inhuman to thrust a naked statue out-of-doors. Not to speak of their incongruities, how dreary do those white figures look at Fountain Abbey in that shrewd Yorkshire atmosphere!"

Occasionally, perhaps, in extensive grounds, a Naiad by a retired fountain, or a Flora not too elaborately gotten up, may be rather a pleasant object; but, after all, the most harmonious figures, where Nature is supposed to hold sway, are those of veritable flesh and blood, even if not after the Greek models.--From Appletons' Journal for May.

WATERING OF HORSES AFTER FEEDING.

The National Live Stock Journal, in giving directions for the care of horses, says: Another common fault in the alimentation of horses is the leading to water just after a full feed of grain. The first effect of this is to largely distend the stomach, and the result may be as serious as if the material were masticated grain and saliva. But should this danger be avoided, matters are not necessarily left in a better state. The sudden and excessive influx of water is likely to wash much of the contents of the stomach into the intestines before the nitrogenous principles have been digested, and fermentation, extrication of gases, overdistensions, colics and inflammation result. Even this is not all. The application of an excess of cold water on the mucous membrane of the stomach and intestines causes vascular congestion and violent

A bucket of white paint will work marvelous improvements about a man's premises; but perhaps the most picturesque effect possible to produce with it, is obtained when a man leans his back against a fresh painted fence.

A notification from the Japanese Government relating to mixed marriages says:—"Any woman of foreign extraction who shall marry a Japanese shall be looked upon as a naturalized Japanese, and be subject to the laws of the Empire."

Round corner rollers will be worn by gentlemen this season, having superseded those with sharp points, and hereafter, a man will be able to call upon a girl, to inquire after the health of her parents, without running the risk of putting out one of her eyes.

Early on Monday morning, a bear visited the farm of Wm. Frost in the 3rd con. of Rawdon, near the village of Marmora, seized a sheep weighing in the vicinity of 200 lbs., killed it, and carried it over logs and stones, and then sat down and devoured it quite coolly.

MERITS OF THE BLAKE PIANOE-FORTE

Occasionally, perhaps, in extensive grounds, a Naiad by a retired fountain, or a Flora not too elaborately gotten up, may be rather a pleasant object; but, after all, the most harmonious figures, where Nature is supposed to hold sway, are those of veritable flesh and blood, even if not after the Greek models.—From Appleton's Journal for May.

WATERING OF HORSES AFTER FEEDING.

The National Live Stock Journal, in giving directions for the care of horses, says: Another common fault in the alimentation of horses is the leading to water just after a full feed of grain. The first effect of this is to largely distend the stomach, and the result may be as serious as if the material were masticated grain and saliva. But, should this danger be avoided, matters are not necessarily left in a better state. The sudden and excessive influx of water is likely to wash much of the contents of the stomach into the intestines before the nitrogenous principles have been digested, and fermentation, extrication of gases, overdistensions, colics and inflammation result. Even this is not all. The application of an excess of cold water on the mucous membrane of the stomach and intestines causes vascular congestion and violent muscular contractions, so that all tend to digestive disorder of a dangerous nature. Copious draughts of iced water are hurtful alike to man and beast. If it must be taken it should be in small quantities only, and frequently. But a drink of water, of moderate temperature, just after a feed of grain, is full of peril. Thirst should be allayed before the feed is given; and if any is allowed after, it should be merely a mouthful, until the lapse of one or two hours' time has been had for gastric digestion. After a feed of hay there is comparatively little danger. From the excessive salivary addition to the hay, and the comparatively small amount of its albuminoids, these are rapidly dissolved out and digested, and the further addition of water is often rather favorable than otherwise in hastening its progress into the bowels, where the digestion of its starch, sugar, fat and other respiratory elements may be completed.

SALTING FOR WEEDS.

Weeds may be destroyed by scattering a small quantity of salt regularly over the walk; but this should only be done when the weather is fine, or it may be washed to the sides and do much damage to the verges. By treating walks to a slight dressing of salt every spring and autumn, they may be kept free of weeds at a minimum of the amount of labor and cost that would be required to pull them up, and not only this, but it has such an effect in killing all mossy confertæ, as to render the gravel always bright and new-looking, nearly equaling in that respect any fresh raised from the pit and newly laid down. It may be remarked, however, that it does not do to use salt where the edgings are of box, as that is sure to suffer injury, and perhaps be killed altogether; but grass verges will stand it well if not sown too close to soak the roots, or get washed to them, should rain by chance occur immediately afterwards. Many other remedies have been recommended to extirpate weeds from walks such as the use of some of the mineral acids, but there is nothing so cheap and simple, or that can be so readily and safely applied, as salt.

EXERCISE FOR FOWLS.

Our domestic animals, derived as they are from wild ancestors, require a certain amount of exercise to keep them in sound and vigorous health. Poultry cannot be kept in large numbers in confined areas without detriment to their constitution. Colonel Taggart of Pennsylvania provides food and exercise for his fowls at the same time. The editor found in his poultry yard several beds about thirty feet square each, in which Colonel Taggart buries oats, several bushels to

The first climbing feat of the season has been performed by a party of Lyons tourists, members of the French Alpine Club, under the most unfavorable circumstances, and when the mountain was covered with nearly seven feet of snow. They assended Pierresur-Haute, notwithstanding the remonstrances of the inhabitants of the villages around.

The active eruption of Vesuvius is increasing slowly. During the night, the reflection of the fire is visible in the abundant volumes of smoke that issue from the crater. Near the new opening are heard frequent subterranean rumblings. The smoke is impregnated with acids to such an extent that the vegetation near the scene of eruption has been much injured.

The Prince of Wales' boys on the Britannia are to be intrusted to the care of Lord Ramsay, as thorough a sailor as there is in the service, says an English paper, and as good a man as there is in the world. Lord Ramsay served for many years in the Galatea, and is supposed to be the only man whom the Duke of Edinburgh likes, and the only man who likes the Duke of Edinburgh.

Prince Bismarck is the only man in Europe who can put his eyebrows in his mouth. He entertained Mr. Healey, the artist, by showing off his accomplishment in this respect. When other men bite their thumbs Bismarck puts his eyebrows in his mouth; and, in view of the present political complications and his own ample leisure, he probably has most of them there now.

"Driver," said a gentleman to a hackman whom he had engaged by the hour, "why is it, the more you beat your horses the slower they seem to proceed?" "That's 'cause I has 'em trained," was reply. Questioned further, the fellow declared:—"When I whips one of my 'osses on the left side he understands I've got a party what travels by the hour, and so he earns 'is oats by loafin'."

Quite a row occurred the other day at a meeting of the West Derby Guardians, in Liverpool. The Work-house Chaplain had worn worn his present surplice for five years or more, and because he suggested that a new one be provided him he was pitched into a manner anything but orthodox. After abusing the poor clergyman for an hour or more it was determined to buy him a new surplice.

The editor found in his poultry yard several beds about thirty feet square each, in which Colonel Taggart buries oats, several bushels to the bed. The grains begin, of course, at once to swell and germinate, and the fowls have free access, scratching and eating the tender sprouts to their heart's content. While the fowls are thus busy on one bed, a new one is prepared, which is in readiness for them by the time it is required. The idea is a good one, and we are glad to call attention to it. In our own yards we have found the benefit of it, and we are glad to learn that we are not alone in the practice.—Fancier's Journal

HOME EMBELLISHMENTS.

Professor Garfield, of the Michigan Agricultural College, finally says: "There is a money value in the making of a beautiful home that will pay a large interest upon the outlay, if the labor be reckoned at its highest value. You may not want to sell; but if you are a thrifty farmer and a business farmer you wish to know at the end of each year what are the profits of your business, and if you find there is not a very large bank-account as the result of the year's work, there is a great satisfaction in knowing that your place has been improved in selling value a considerable percentage, through the exhibition of tact and taste in making the premises attractive. The merchant in his invoice takes account of his samples and the contents of his show-window. Likewise the farmer should count in the embellishments of his home as a part of his capital stock."

The Pope has given strict orders that for the grand religious functions which will be celebrated in St. Peter's on the 3rd of June admission will be obtained only by ticket, so as to exclude unwelcome visitors, particularly the corps diplomatique accredited to the Quirinal. That body has instructions from the various Governments to be at its post until the Holy Father dies, even should the event be postponed to the Autumn, when the malaria is most prevalent.

The cabins of the barges plying on the canal between London and Liverpool are destitute of windows; there is but one aperture through which light and air can be admitted, and at night it is the common practice of the barges to lock up this single orifice. Recently a witness at a Coroner's inquest in England deposed that she had given birth to no fewer than 19 children on board a barge, and that she, her husband, and six surviving olive branches all slept in the hutch of what in canal technology is termed a "narrow boat."

Who are blessed:—The man who minds his own business; the woman who never says to her husband, "I told you so;" the man who can sew on his buttons when the baby is crying; the mother-in-law who never reminds you that you married above your station; the old maid that don't hate old people and children; the old bachelor that don't hate cats and pin cushions; the married people that don't wish they were single; the single people that are content to remain so; the husband who never says his mother's pies were better than his wife's are.

For the information of Christian generally, it may be briefly stated that this Institution, now in full operation, owes its origin to the liberality of a Christian gentleman, a resident of Toronto, who has invested a portion of his means in the enterprise, as a free-will offering to the Lord, with the view of scattering broadcast over our land, Tracts, Books, &c., &c., which unfold the exalted privileges of the believers, and treat of the "LIFE OF FAITH" or Trust, and of the power and peace of HOLINESS, and Gospel and Evangelical Literature.

No Denominational Institution.

It is neither connected with, nor under the patronage of any particular church. All the Publications it issues will be strictly evangelical, and will meet the wants of all Christians. Largely the Books, &c., &c., will be those published by the Willard Tract Repository of Boston, under the care of the well known DR. CULLIS.

ALL PROFITS that may be made will be devoted to the establishment of a fund for gratuitous distribution of the Tracts and Books to persons and places where they are needed as may be directed by the Committee. We beg also to say that this Fund for free distribution is open for donations to all who may desire to help in this work of God.

We ask all who may desire to promote the higher spiritual life of the churches and to help in winning souls for Christ, to co-operate with us by circulating sound religious literature throughout the land.

MANHOOD:

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED!!

WE have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, of this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

"THE GREATEST NAPANEE, ONT"

Lines by a Plain Man.

The following lines were sent by Dr. W. a lady to whom he wished to pay his ad upon her saying she would have no shaped fellow as him:—

'Tis true my shape is somewhat odd,
 But blaming me, is blaming God;
 For, had I spoke myself to birth,
 I'd please the prettiest lass on earth;
 And, could I form myself anew,
 I would not fail of pleasing you.
 Thy charms have long been dear to far
 And half the country boasts your name
 But who that dimple chin supplied
 And let thy cheeks thy rosy pride,
 With hair of jet thy temples grace,
 And with a slender shape thy waist?
 Thyself had'st thou thoust beautiful me
 To thee the praise were duly paid;
 But since the power that fashion'd thee
 With the same hand created me,
 Who might have touch'd my frame like
 And left thee one deform'd as mine,
 For what thou art, that Power adored,
 And anser at my odd shape no more!
 Those eyes that dart destructive rays,
 E'en let them sparkle to His praise;
 Thy breast, the seat of love and snow,
 Teach it His praise to pant and glow!
 Then heaven inspire thy yielding voice
 To one that's better worth thy choice.
 And if the rest my suit disdain,
 The thought shall never give me pain;
 But that I tempt no greater curse,
 Heaven I'll adore I'm made no worse!

ST. MARY'S, N. B., Sept. 12, 1876.
MR. T. J. B. HARDING,
DEAR SIR:—Being desirous that others may know something of the merits of your ONSTI-TUTIONAL REMEDY, I wish to inform you what it has done for me. I was twenty-nine years old, had been out of health for about five years. I had employed three or four different doctors, and tried various medicines,
without receiving any permanent benefit, but
continued rather to grow worse, until last fall,
when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe sore-ness and pain under the shoulder blades and
through the shoulders, with very lame back,
and a feeling in my right lung as though there
was a weight bearing it down, with continual dropping in the throat and down upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I commenced to take your atarrh Remedy, one bottle of which eased my pains and gave me an improved appetite, and after taking four bottles I was restored to health so as to be able to enure hard and continued labor, such as chopping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I attribute solely, with God's blessing, to the use of your Catarrh Remedy.

FOR CHEAP

LINES BY A PLAIN MAN.

The following lines were sent by Dr. Watts to a lady to whom he wished to pay his addresses upon her saying she would have no such ill shaped fellow as him:—

'Tis true my shape is somewhat odd,
But blaming me, is blaming God;
For, had I spoke myself to birth,
I'd please the prettiest lass on earth;
And, could I form myself anew,
I would not fail of pleasing you.
Thy charms have long been dear to fame,
And half the country boasts your name:
But who that dimple chin supplied
And let thy cheeks thy rosy pride,
With hair of jet thy temples grace'd,
And with a slender shape thy waist?
Thyself had'st thou thus beautious made,
To these the praise were duly paid;
But since the power that fashion'd thee,
With the same hand created me,
Who might have touch'd my frame like thine,
And left thee one deform'd as mine—
For what thou art, that Power adores,
And sneer at my odd shape no more!
Those eyes that dart destructive rays,
E'en let them sparkle to His praise;
Thy breast, the seat of love and snow,
Teach it His praise to pant and glow!
Then heaven inspire thy yielding voice,
To one that's better worth thy choice.
And if the rest my suit disdain,
The thought shall never give me pain;
But that I tempt no greater curse,
Heaven I'll adore I'm made no worse!

THE BRIDAL DRESS.

In the centre of the city of Berlin stands a building, styled the Colosseum. It is at present entirely devoted to purposes of amusement for the less wealthy classes of that city—balls, concerts, and theatrical exhibitions being there given at a very moderate charge. During the carnival, masked balls are given here. Upon such occasions the immense dancing saloon is crowded to excess; and the galleries, which entirely surround it, are likewise filled with spectators of the moving panorama below.

On one of the evenings set apart for these masquerades, I accompanied two officers of the regiment of guards to this scene of merriment, we being all carefully equipped for the occasion. To my companions the concealment of their persons was essentially necessary, since their recognition as officers of the army would have compelled them to forego the pleasures of the dance. On entering, we found the music had already commenced, and the sets for the contre-danse which was to open the ball already formed. In order more perfectly to enjoy the scene, we pressed our way through the supper-room upstairs, and succeeded in gaining a position in the gallery, which commanded a full view of the exhilarating spectacle. The young girls were generally dressed in some fancy garb, which though far from being rich or magnificent yet displayed much taste. The throng which pressed upon the dancers was kept back by a dapper little master of the ceremonies, who, having at length marshalled his forces to his liking, stepped into the middle of the vacant space, and, clapping his hands gave the signal to the musicians, who at once set loose the feet of the impatient multitude. Now the scene was at its height, for the stirring music created a vivacity which it was impossible to resist.

The Polonaise, as danced at Berlin, is much more stirring and varying than what is tripped in England under that name. In one of the manoeuvres which had been distinguished as much for his superior abilities as for the warmth of his feelings. He was destined for the medical profession, and the progress he had made in the various studies of that important calling, held out the brightest prospect of his future success and eminence. Whilst in his attendance on the medical classes, he had formed an intimacy in a family to which accident had gained him an introduction—that of a respectable banker. He had become deeply attached to the daughter of the banker, and had every reason to believe that his passion was returned. She was a beautiful young girl, the grace of whose person did not surpass the beauties of her mind. Amiable and accomplished, she was formed to charm; and in the ardent eye of the young student, she seemed more than earthly.

It was long perhaps before any absolute declaration had revealed to each other the feelings of their hearts; and, by a thousand little incidents, their affection was increased and strengthened, until it became to each the absorbing passion of the soul. Their minds, tinged with the deep romantic feeling so prevalent amongst the young of Germany, considered the vows that had passed between them as linking their destinies, sacred and indissoluble. It was not, however, an easy task to overcome the scruples of the lady's father as to the prospects of his future son-in-law; and though the reputation of the young student was spotless, the calculating banker required more than the inclinations of his daughter, and the amiable properties of her admirer, to induce him to consent to their union.

Money was a necessary possession in the eyes of a worldly minded man, who shook his head when they talked of love and mutual happiness.

How the old man became at length softened into an approbation of the match, did not clearly appear; but certain it is, that, after the student had passed his examination and obtained his degree, a day was appointed for the betrothing, with his full consent.

It may be imagined with what feelings the young physician looked forward to an event which was in his eyes the most important in his life.

The great fair of Leipsic occurred a short time before the auspicious day which was to unite these two happy beings, and the physician hastened to buy his mistress a bridal dress from out the vast magazine of manufactures which are there collected.

He selected one which was equally rich and engaging, being a white satin festooned with worked flowers of the most brilliant colors.

His present was received with a smile of approbation, which repaid him tenfold for the labour he had undertaken, and the promise to wear it on her betrothal rendered his joy supreme.

It must be observed that in Germany a betrothment precedes the marriage, and is almost as ceremonious as the nuptials themselves.

The ceremony on this occasion was performed with every circumstance that could heighten the prospects of the parties

ANGRY WORDS.

Angry words are often spoken
In a rash and thoughtless hour,
Brightest links of life are broken,
By the dark insidious power.

Hearts inspired by warmest feeling,
Ne'er before by anger stirred,
Of are rent past human feeling
By a simple angry word.

Angry words—oh! let them never
From the tongue unbridled slip:
May the heart's best impulse ever
Check them ere they spoil the lip.

TRIAL BY JURY.

On a popular circuit the other day a bombardier of the Royal Artillery was put on trial for perjury. The evidence was clear and conclusive, and the dejected countenance of the prisoner showed that he felt "the game was up," and that a long course of "toke and skilly" was in store for him. The learned counsel for the prosecution sat down on the conclusion of his case, confident that the doom of that perjured bombardier was sealed. Up rose the counsel for the defence, a barrister of some three month's standing, and thus addressed the jury: "May it please your lordship—gentlemen of the jury, I appear before you on behalf of the gallant soldier in the dock. It is not my intention to call witnesses and stresspass further upon your valuable time. I shall content myself with inviting your special attention to what I consider the main point at issue. Gentlemen, you have heard full particulars of the charge against the prisoner from my learned friend and his witnesses, you will hear a second able and lucid statement of the case from my lord, whose turn to address you will come next. In the meantime it is my duty to lay before you the real issue, and it is this: On the eye of a great European war, the extent and duration of which no one can predict, are you, as already overburdened taxpayers, or are you not, prepared to consign the prisoner at the bar to a long period of imprisonment, and pay for a probably less efficient substitute to take his place and perform his military duties?" The learned judge here interposed, and said that he really could not sit upon the Bench allow such a preposterously false and irrelevant issue to be put to the jury. The unabashed young counsel, however, hinted to his lordship that they could not both address the jury at once, and in the words of Solomon suggested that there was a time for everything, and that his lordship's had not yet come. The judge gave way, and the counsel for the prisoner proceeded: "Gentlemen, I appeal to you as ratepayers whether the real issue is not what I have stated. Will you lose the services of a trained, able bodied soldier and pay for a possible inferior substitute, or will you not? That is the question I ask you to answer, and I leave it confidently in your hands." I need not say that in his subsequent charge to the jury "m'lud" ridiculed this extraordinary appeal to the jury, and told them that what they had to consider was whether or not the prisoner was guilty of the perjury with which he was charged, enlarging upon the serious extent to which the crime of depriving affected the

Now the scene was at its height, for the stirring music created a vivacity which it was impossible to resist.

The Polonaise, as danced at Berlin, is much more stirring and varying than what is tripped in England under that name. In one of the maneuvers which belonged to it, each lady in her turn is led to the centre, where she is dancing around by the gentleman; whilst she, holding a handkerchief in her hand, at length tosses it in the air, and she becomes the partner of him whose superior activity gains the possession of it. This had been often repeated with much harmless mirth, when we observed a female more sumptuously dressed than her companions enclosed in the circle; and as a tall young man dressed in black caught her handkerchief, and claimed her hand, he suddenly started back and uttered one of those piercing cries which betokened some agonizing horror. He retreated from the girl as if he had discovered in her something pestiferous; and overcome apparently by some terrible feeling, he sank senseless into the arms of those who were standing near him.

An incident of this nature is sure to produce confusion in a ball-room; and from the singular circumstances which attended the one in question the dancing and music almost immediately ceased. A general rush took place towards the young man, whose mask had been removed, and exhibited features which had already assumed a death-like hue, whilst a cold perspiration stood upon his brow. As it was impossible to keep off the crowd, who, in their eagerness to observe what was passing, threatened to suffocate the unfortunate object who had caused so general an interest, he was removed into the supper room, and laid upon one of the settees which stood about. Here a gentleman pulling off his mask, discovered himself as the Crown Prince, and exercising the authority which his rank entitled him to, he requested the room to be immediately cleared and a physician to be sent for. My companions and myself had in the meantime descended into the room where the patient lay extended; and as I had fortunately a lancet in my pocket, I suggested to the Prince the necessity of instantly bleeding him.

It must be observed that in Germany a betrothment precedes the marriage, and is almost as ceremonious as the nuptials themselves.

The ceremony on this occasion was performed with every circumstance that could heighten the prospects of the parties concerned. Their parents were there consenting, and friends surrounded them whose smiles added their cheering influence.

The bride wore the dress which her lover had procured for her; and in his eyes she had never appeared so attractive.

The vows were at length pronounced, and the contracts signed. The marriage-day was fixed for the following week.

After the ceremony, a sumptuous feast was prepared, in the midst of which a feeling of indisposition compelled the young bride suddenly to seek her chamber.

She threw herself on the bed, and—such are the insecurities of a fleeting existence—rose from it no more.

A virulent fever attacked her delicate frame, and carried her unresistingly and remorselessly to the tomb. The feelings of an impassioned youth, thus robbed of her who was so shortly to have become his wife, may be more easily imagined than described. To say that he wept, and raved, and tore his hair, would perhaps little express the deep intensity of his anguish. Only one request he made, it was that she should be buried in the dress she wore at their betrothal. He followed her to the grave; and, overpowered by his feelings, threw himself upon the coffin as it was about to be covered up; and, with a frenzied vehemence, insisted upon having one more look before the grave was closed for ever. The coffinlid was taken off, and he gazed upon the clammy features of the decaying corpse until his head grew dizzy, and he was drawn senseless from the grave.

It was not only to the bereaved lover that the view of the dead body of his mistress had been of moment. The gravedigger had perceived with emotion the magnificent habiliments which adorned the corpse, and his cupidity was excited. In the dead of night, he despoiled the body, and presented to his own daughter the floral satin frock which had formed ion of his case, confident that the doom of that perjured bombardier was sealed. Up rose the counsel for the defence, a barrister of some three months' standing; and thus addressed the jury: "May it please your lordship—gentlemen of the jury, I appear before you in behalf of the gallant soldier in the dock. It is not my intention to call witnesses and so trespass further upon your valuable time. I shall content myself with inviting your special attention to what I consider the main point at issue. Gentlemen, you have heard full particulars of the charge against the prisoner from my learned friend and his witnesses, you will hear a second able and lucid statement of the case from my lord, whose turn to address you will come next. In the meantime it is my duty to lay before you the real issue, and it is this: On the eye of a great European war, the extent and duration of which no one can predict, are you, as already overburdened taxpayers, or are you not prepared to consign the prisoner at the bar to a long period of imprisonment, and pay for a probably less efficient substitute to take his place and perform his military duties?" The learned judge here interposed, and said that he really could not sit upon the Bench allow such a preposterously false and irrelevant issue to be put to the jury. The unabashed young counsel, however, hinted to his lordship that they could not both address the jury at once, and in the words of Solomon suggested that there was a time for everything, and that his lordship's had not yet come. The judge gave way, and the counsel for the prisoner proceeded: "Gentlemen, I appeal to you as ratepayers whether the real issue is not what I have stated. Will you lose the services of a trained, able bodied soldier and pay for a possible inferior substitute, or will you not? That is the question I ask you to answer, and I leave it confidently in your hands." I need not say that in his subsequent charge to the jury "mad" ridiculed this extraordinary appeal to the jury, and told them that what they had to consider was whether or not the prisoner was guilty of the perjury with which he was charged, enlarging upon the serious extent to which the crime of perjury affected the interests of society. His Lordship ceased and the jury turned round in the box to consult. After less than five minutes' consultation the foreman pronounced the verdict. "Not Guilty." The judges' pen fell from his hand, and his wig almost rose from his head with horror as he stared at the counsel for the prosecution, while the counsel for the prosecution stared in turn at the judge. The witnesses stared at one another, and the perjured bombardier stared at the Court in general with an amazement which no words can adequately describe. No one seemed to believe his own senses as he heard this astounding verdict. But there was the foreman smiling blandly and his fellow jurors blinking complacently at the prisoner, so it gradually dawned upon the gallant bombardier that he was free, that a jury of his enlightened countrymen had acquitted him. Thereupon he stepped briskly from the dock and left the court gaily with his friends to drink to the health of that noble institution, that palladium of British liberty—trial by jury. —Sporting Gazette.

FASHIONABLE WOMEN'S DRESS IN LONDON.

"In the wildest days of the tie-back or pin back mania," writes Olive Logan from London, "there never was such a tightness in the matter of skirts as now prevails" in what is called "the eelskin dress." Whatever the paucity of folds in the pin-back in the front part, in the enormous exuberance of the panier or bustle the balance was struck. But now, not only is the bustle a thing of horror, but even the necessary underclothing is considered de trop. To lengthen the waist far beyond the natural proportions, a stiff webbing of elastic is fastened to the stays to the depth of half a foot; and to this, at first, narrow skirts were buttoned. But even this is now abandoned for another scheme to acquire slenderness. Mrs. Swisshelm's much-ridiculed chemi-

more sumptuously dressed than her companions enclosed in the circle; and as a tall young man dressed in black caught her handkerchief, and claimed her hand, he suddenly started back and uttered one of those piercing cries which betokened some agonizing horror. He retreated from the girl as if he had discovered in her something pestiferous; and overcame apparently by some terrible feeling, he sank senseless into the arms of those who were standing near him.

An incident of this nature is sure to produce confusion in a ball-room; and, from the singular circumstances which attended the one in question the dancing and music almost immediately ceased. A general rush took place towards the young man, whose mask had been removed, and exhibited features which had already assumed a death-like hue, whilst a cold perspiration stood upon his brow. As it was impossible to keep off the crowd, who, in their eagerness to observe what was passing, threatened to suffocate the unfortunate object who had caused so general an interest, he was removed into the supper room, and laid upon one of the settees which stood about. Here a gentleman pulling off his mask, discovered himself as the Crown Prince, and exercising the authority which his rank entitled him to, he requested the room to be immediately cleared and a physician to be sent for. My companions and myself had in the meantime descended into the room where the patient lay extended; and as I had fortunately a lancet in my pocket, I suggested...

A young surgeon, who was present, hearing the suggestion, offered his aid in the operation, and the preparations were in a moment completed. It was with some difficulty that a little blood was drawn, but the it had the effect of bringing the young man back again to sense. Even yet, his mind seemed a prey to some horrible fantasy; for, starting up his whole frame shook with a violent convulsion, and with marks of the most vivid terror, he ejaculated several times, "I saw her!" He appeared to have come alone to the hall, for no one stepped forward to claim acquaintance or kinship with him; and it was judged best to remove him to a coach the moment he was able to endure motion. Fortunately, a card in his pocket revealed his address, and, with proper precautions, he was thus sent home.

On our return to the saloon, we found the masked lady who appeared to have been the immediate cause of this extraordinary event, very unconcernedly pursuing her sport, and seemingly unconscious of the speculations that were formed respecting her. She was eagerly interrogated by several persons present as to the young man, to whom her presence had apparently given such a shock; but she persisted in denying any knowledge of him, or of any circumstance which could elucidate the affair. The intensity of the feeling that had been raised now seemed gradually to subside, and the crowd returned to the pursuits of the evening. Some few there were who, feeling that something more than ordinary was involved in the mystery, indulge in numberless wild conjectures; and as the fertility of their imaginations was increased by sparkling champagne, no limit was set to the dark conjurations into which their inherent passion for romance led them. It would be idle to deny that the affair had roused my curiosity in a very considerable degree, and the gloomy visions with which I heard others regale themselves, induced in me a restless anxiety to clear up the mystery. It was, however, some time before I was able to procure a relation concerning this young man on which I could place an implicit reliance; and his history was told to me in very nearly the following terms:

His father was a small proprietor in the neighborhood of Berlin and cultivated his own farm. This was his only son, and he had been sent at the proper age to the University of Berlin, where he day was fixed for the following week.

After the ceremony, a sumptuous feast was prepared, in the midst of which a feeling of indisposition compelled the young bride suddenly to seek her chamber.

She threw herself on the bed, and—such are the insecurities of a fleeting existence—rose from it no more.

A violent fever attacked her delicate frame, and carried her unresistingly and remorselessly to the tomb. The feelings of an impassioned youth, thus robbed of her who was so shortly to have become his wife, may be more easily imagined than described. To say that he wept, and raved, and tore his hair, would perhaps little express the deep intensity of his anguish. Only one request he made, it was that she should be buried in the dress she wore at their betrothal. He followed her to the grave; and, overpowered by his feelings, threw himself upon the coffin as it was about to be covered up; and, with a frenzied vehemence, insisted upon having one more look before the grave was closed for ever. The coffinlid was taken off, and he gazed upon the clammy features of the decaying corpse until his head grew dizzy, and he was drawn senseless from the grave.

It was not only to the bereaved lover that the view of the dead body of his mistress had been of moment. The grave-digger had perceived with emotion the magnificent habiliments which adorned the corpse, and his cupidity was excited. In the dead of night, he despoiled the body, and presented to his own daughter the flowered satin frock which had formed the bridal dress of the deceased young lady. It was long after these events that she wore this identical dress at the masked ball at the Colosseum. The girl herself was ignorant of the mode by which her father had gained possession of it, though the richness of his gift had in some measure excited her surprise.

She, therefore, adorned herself in the spoils of the grave, in perfect unconsciousness of the unhallowed violation that had been committed. It is needless to add, that it was this dress which caused the young man's sudden horror, which I have described. It was a garment so peculiar as scarcely to allow a doubt as to its identity; and when it suddenly flashed before his eyes, he thought he saw his departed mistress arisen from the grave to upbraid him for the levity which permitted his presence at a ball.

It was stated that a remarkable resemblance existed in the figures of the two females; and as the grave-digger's daughter was masked, the horrible conception of the young enthusiast will not be considered as altogether unnatural or incredible.

From the notoriety which the circumstance gained, an inquiry was instituted into the affair; and, by an inspection of the rifled tomb, the guilt of the grave-digger was made apparent, and he is now expiating his crime as a convicted felon. From the information I acquired respecting the physician, it appeared that he overcame the shock which he had received, though he had passed through many fits of delirium, and had suffered from a fever which had threatened the extinction both of his reason and of his life.

A BULLET-PROOF PASSENGER CAR

There has just been completed at the car shops at York, Pa., the first bullet-proof car ever manufactured in the United States. The car is 31 feet long, 8 feet high, and furnished with all the latest improvements in ventilation, etc. The body below the windows is covered with 3/4 inch iron, and the panels between the windows and the body above them are covered with 3-16 inch steel. The windows can be closed with steel slides, and when they are down the entire car is bullet-proof. The interior is richly ornamented, and in appearance inside and out resembles a first-class passenger coach. It weighs about 6,500 pounds, and was ordered by the Spanish Government for use in Cuba.

while the counsel for the prosecution stared in turn at the judge. The witnesses stared at one another, and the perjured bombardier stared at the Court in general with an amazement which no words can adequately describe. No one seemed to believe his own senses as he heard this astounding verdict. But there was the foreman smiling blandly and his fellow jurors blinking complacently at the prisoner, so it gradually dawned upon the gallant bombardier that he was free, that a jury of his enlightened countrymen had acquitted him. But even this is now abandoned, for another scheme to acquire slenderness. Mrs. Swissheim's much-ridiculed chemise is in demand, and garments made in this way are sold in the furnishing shops, and patterns of it pass eagerly from hand to hand among lady friends. Some ladies have had regular stage tights made, in thick webbing, and over this they wear nothing but the outer dress, underskirts being stimulated by pleated ruffles of white muslin, sewn to the edge of the dress, which is then tied back until the woman within is shackled almost like a convict in a chain gang. No more uncomfortable fashion ever was devised, for not only are the limbs confined by the binding dress, but the wearer must constantly concern herself about the condition of the bodice, that portion being in incessant danger of turning itself up behind, wringing side out, like an umbrella in a wind storm.

THE COUNTRY TEACHER.

A little town, no matter what its name, in Canada has a school mistress who should never lack for a situation in case she is ever permitted to leave her present one. One of her big boys asked to escort her home from singing-school one night, and was politely mitenied. He tried to get even with the teacher he loved, but could not win, by playing tricks in school hours, neglecting his studies, putting pins in the seats of his fellows, and running to slide down hill. The mistress bore with him till patience was exhausted, and then called him up and gave him a sound flogging. The boy made complaint at home, and told the cause. The parents could have said amen to the whipping, but that a country school-mistress should give their son the sack was too much. They sued the teacher and obtained a judgment for $3.50, which she paid. The next day in opening school, she made this little speech:

"I have whipped a looby soundly, which pleasure cost only three dollars and a half. Now, if any other of my scholars are inclined to imitate him, they will have the kindness to 'step forward, receive the money and the flogging, and then we will go on with our studies. I am here to instruct you, not to be courted."

There has been no trouble in that school since, nor any attempt by the school lads to play the gallant with the teacher. She begins a new term soon with salary increased, and on the crest of public favor.

ANGRY WORDS.

Angry words are often spoken
In a rash and thoughtless hour,
Brightest links of life are broken,
By the dark insidious power.

Hearts inspired by warmest feeling,

Check them ere they spoil the lip.

TRIAL BY JURY.

On a popular circuit the other day a bombardier of the Royal Artillery was put on trial for perjury. The evidence was clear and conclusive, and the dejected countenance of the prisoner showed that he felt "the game was up," and that a long course of "toke and skilly" was in store for him. The learned counsel for the prosecution sat down on the conclusion of his case, confident that the doom of that perjured bombardier was sealed. Up rose the counsel for the defence, a barrister of some three months' standing; and thus addressed the jury: "May it please your lordship—gentlemen of the jury, I appear before you in behalf of the gallant soldier in the dock. It is not my intention to call witnesses and so trespass further upon your valuable time. I shall content myself with inviting your special attention to what I consider the main point at issue. A MOST AMUSING BREACH OF MARRIAGE CASE.

The following most amusing story, published by the N. Y. World will doubtless be interesting to all Canadians:—

"That thorough lawyer and lover of good victuals and good drink, the late James O'Reiley, of Kingston, in Canada, was once intrusted with the prosecution of a breach of promise case which had absolutely no salient features. The plaintiff was an elderly cook. She was fat, as all good cooks, Caucasian or colored, are and should be; her homely face was rendered by exposure to the coals—the face of a martyr to the steak; she had a single eye to her art—and, alas! lost one in her head. Her lover was of humble station; neither of them could read, so that in literature, as in looks neither could say black was the white of the other's eye. Fortunately, O'Reiley had an inspiration. He proved that the defendant used to visit the plaintiff, and sigh, protest and eat, and that during their acquaintanceship he had gained no less than forty pounds in weight. He put in evidence two photographs of the defendant; one, taken before that acquaintanceship, showed him lean and hungry; in the other he was a fat and greasy citizen. "To whom," said the advocate, out-Shylocking Shylock, "to whom do those forty pounds belong, if not to my client." And the jury, convinced that the woman had a claim in equity and confounding hopelessly pounds sterling with pounds avoirdupois, gave her a verdict for £40 out of the British realm.

A HERO IN DANGER.

In Montgomery Queen's Circus procession which passed through the streets was a car containing a lion, a lioness and a tiger. The lion became exceedingly uneasy making leaps against the front of the cage. Finally it seemed as if the tiger had excited the displeasures of the desert king, for with a frightful roar, the animal leaped on the tiger which was lying at the other end of the cage. The latter showed fight at once. Immediately quick as a flash, the keeper who was riding in the cage with the animals, dashed at the two contending monsters and struck them with his wip. Finding that useless, and the brutes kept fighting, the brave man took an iron bar and gave the lion a terrific blow. The beast immediately relinquished his hold of his fellow brute, turned upon the man, and seized him by the leg. The scene then was thrilling in the highest degree. There was a human being securely enclosed in the den of these horrid monsters, and one of them was then cranching this man's leg with its terrible fangs. The keeper, who is a born hero, was, however equal to the emergency. Without flinching or showing the slightest fear, he with his bar rained blow upon blow upon the lion's head. Wonderful to relate, the animal released his hold and retired sullenly to the other end of the cage. The keeper showed he was lord of them all, and stood unharmed amid the savage fighting beasts, whose teeth were then crimsoned with his and each others blood from the assembled crowd, which had

THE HOUSE-CLEANING MANIA.

"It is the time of Spring!" she said
Her eyes began to glare,
Away she did her novel fling,
And up she tied her hair.

And round it did a towel furl,
And seized a great dust-pan,
And shouted to her servant girl,
And to her hired man.

They rushed for soap into the store,
They made a mighty stir,
They tore the carpets from the floor,
They called the whitewasher.

They pulled the pictures from the wall,
They seized each lounge and chair,
They carried out the bedsteads all,
And out the bedding bare.

Around flew water, soft and hard,
Away flew dog and cat,
The husband flew into the yard,
And on the sofa sat.

Upon its back he rubbed a match,
Wherewith his pipe he lit,
And thought that he a cold should catch,
Before the end of it.

It is not safe! he may not stay,
He must again retreat,
The dustiest of their carpets they,
Behind his back do beat.

He fieth to the distant elub,
Of home he will have none,
Elsewhere will hide, elsewhere will grub,
Till cleaning time be done.—Grip.

ON BOARD A TURKISH IRON-CLAD.

The Daily Telegraph correspondence from Constantinople tells of a visit to the Turkish fleet:—As we went by and received a salute from the various vessels, I could but notice that their external appearance was equal to that of English ships, while in many respects superior to that of both French and German men-of-war that I had chanced at various times to see. But it was not with this so much that I had to busy myself as with their effective power, shown by the condition and discipline of their crews and the state of their batteries. These must be the criterion; all else was useless. At last we ran alongside the Feteh Bolend, and were soon on board. Here we had a vessel which forms one of a class of sloops designed especially for the Turkish Government. She was not very large; her crew, all told, would ordinarily be— if in the English vice—160 men. But her peculiar power consisted in the facts, first of all, that to an enemy's battery she would present but a very small target; secondly, that that target was very heavily armoured; thirdly, that from her central battery of four seven-inch guns, she could obtain a nearly all-round fire; and, fourthly, that, for a fight at sea, she was as handy a boat as was ever launched. Remember that our visit was unexpected, and that it was the Mohammedan Sunday, when the men had ceased from work. Descending between decks without a moment's delay we were at once in the central battery. Not a sound was to be heard. So far from this evidence of defective discipline being forthcoming, the ship might have been wholly deserted, so quiet was the place. Not a rope was out of place. You might have eaten your lunch from the decks. The guns were as clean as though English sailors had spent their lives on their preservation. The armourers' stores of Winchester rifles, the cutlasses, the belts, and the pikes were all stacked and placed as on a British man-of-war. Had it not been for the fez which a motionless marine who guarded the captain's cabin wore I might have imagined I was on board her Britannic Majesty's ship Pallas. But this was a Turkish war vessel, as we now found when a bugle sounded, and 200 men came springing into the battery. Yet here, again, was food for astonishment: Their naked feet made the only noise we heard—not a word was spoken. The ship was preparing for action; belts were being buckled on, the magazine opened, the guns loaded, the men were at quarters, and yet not a sound save the word of command. Then came the order for "independent firing" at a supposed

in a law; and though the reputation the young student was spotless, the banker required more than natiations of his daughter, and the properties of her admirer, to induce him to consent to their union.

It was a necessary possession in of a worldly minded man, who's head when they talked of love and happiness.

he old man became at length into an approbation of the match, clearly appear; but certain it is, or the student had passed his examination and obtained his degree, a day dated of the betrothing, with his consent.

He was imagined with what feelings the physician looked forward to an union which was in his eyes the most important in his life.

A fair of Leipsic occurred a few days before the auspicious day as to unite these two happy beings. The physician hastened to buy a beautiful dress from out the bazaar of manufacturers which are collected.

He selected one which was equally rich and elegant, being a white satin festooned with worked flowers of the most brilliant colors.

The dress was received with a smile of satisfaction, which repaid him tenfold for the labor he had undertaken, and the day when he wore it on her betrothal was a day of joy supreme.

It is observed that in Germany a ceremony precedes the marriage, and as a ceremony as the nuptials.

The ceremony on this occasion was performed with every circumstance that brightens the prospects of the parties. Their parents were there, and friends surrounded them, and all added their cheering influences.

She wore the dress which her father procured for her; and in his had never appeared so attractive. The dress was at length pronounced, the contracts signed. The marriage fixed for the following week.

The ceremony, a sumptuous feast, in the midst of which a slight indisposition compelled the bride suddenly to seek her chamber.

She threw herself on the bed, and— the insecurity of a fleeting existence from it no more.

A violent fever attacked her delicate frame, and carried her unresistingly and passively to the tomb. The feelings of the young man, thus robbed of his wife so shortly to have become a widow, may be more easily imagined than described. To say that he wept, and that he tore his hair, would perhaps express the deep intensity of his grief.

Only one request he made, and that she should be buried in the dress which he had procured for her. He followed her to the grave; and, overpowered by grief, he threw himself upon the coffin, and sobbed for hours.

He remained there until he was carried off by the undertaker, and was laid in the grave.

Not only to the bereaved lover, but to the view of the dead body of his wife, he had been of moment. The grave-diggers perceived with emotion the beautiful garments which adorned her, and his cupid's eye was excited. At midnight, he despoiled the dead of her dress, and presented it to his own daughter, who had formed a dress of the deceased young man. It was long after these events that the girl, in this identical dress at the mask-ball at the Colosseum. The girl, ignorant of the mode by which she had gained possession of it, and the richness of his gift had in some degree excited her surprise.

She therefore, adorned herself in the dress, in perfect unconsciousness of the unallowable violation that had been committed. It is needless to add, ing your special attention to what I consider the main point at issue. Gentlemen, you have heard full particulars of the charge against the prisoner from my learned friend and his witnesses, you will hear a second able and lucid statement of the case from my lord, whose turn to address you will come next. The judge gave way, and the counsel for the prisoner proceeded: "Gentlemen, I appeal to you as ratepayers whether the real issue is not what I have stated. Will you lose the services of a trained, able bodied soldier and pay for a possible inferior substitute, or will you not? That is the question I ask you to answer, and I leave it confidently in your hands." I need not say that in his subsequent charge to the jury "my lord" ridiculed this extraordinary appeal to the jury, and told them that what they had to consider was whether or not the prisoner was guilty of the perjury with which he was charged, enlarging upon the serious extent to which the crime of perjury affected the interests of society. His Lordship ceased and the jury turned round in the box to consult. After less than five minutes' consultation the foreman pronounced the verdict. "Not Guilty." The judges' pen fell from his hand, and his wig almost rose from his head with terror as he stared at the counsel for the prosecution, while the counsel for the prosecution stared in turn at the judge. The witnesses stared at one another, and the perjured bombardier stared at the Court in general with an amazement which no words can adequately describe. No one seemed to believe his own senses as he heard this astounding verdict. But there was the foreman smiling blandly and his fellow jurors blinking complacently at the prisoner, so it gradually dawned upon the gallant bombardier that he was free, that a jury of his enlightened countrymen had acquitted him. Thereupon he stepped briskly from the dock and left the court gaily with his friends to drink to the health of that noble institution, that palladium of British liberty—trial by jury.

FASHIONABLE WOMEN'S DRESS IN LONDON.

"In the wildest days of the tie-back or pin-back mania," writes Olive Logan from London, "there never was such a tightness in the matter of skirts as now prevails" in what is called "the eelskin dress." Whatever the paucity of folds in the pin-back in the former part, in the enormous exuberance of the panier or bustle the balance was struck. But now, not only is the bustle a thing of horror, but even the necessary underclothing is considered de trop. To lengthen the waist far beyond the natural proportions, a stiff webbing of elastic is fastened to the stays to the depth of half a foot; and to this, at first, narrow skirts were buttoned. But even this is now abandoned, for another scheme to acquire slenderness. Mrs. Swissheim's much-ridiculed chemise is in demand, and garments made in this way are sold in the furnishing shops, and patterns of it pass eagerly from hand to hand among lady friends. Some ladies have had regular stage tights made, in thick webbing, and over this they wear nothing but the outer dress, underskirts being stimulated by pleated ruffles of white muslin, sewn to the edge of the dress, which is then tied back until the woman within is shackled almost like a

And the jury, convinced that the woman had a claim in equity and confounding hopelessly pounds sterling with pounds avoirdupois, gave her a verdict for £40 out of the British realm.

A HERO IN DANGER.

In Montgomery Queen's Circus procession which passed through the streets was a car containing a lion, a lioness and a tiger. The lion became exceedingly uneasy making leaps against the front of the cage. Finally it seemed as if the tiger had excited the displeasures of the desert king, for with a frightful roar, the animal leaped on the tiger which was lying at the other end of the cage. The latter showed fight at once. Immediately quick as a flash, the keeper who was riding in the cage with the animals, dashed at the two contending monsters and struck them with his whip. Finding that useless, and the brutes kept fighting, the brave man took an iron bar and gave the lion a terrific blow. The beast immediately relinquished his hold of his fellow brute, turned upon the man, and seized him by the leg. The scene then was thrilling in the highest degree. There was a human being securely enclosed in the den of these horrid monsters, and one of them was then crunching this man's leg with its terrible fangs. The keeper, who is a born hero, was, however equal to the emergency. Without flinching or showing the slightest fear, he with his bar rained blow upon blow upon the lion's head. Wonderful to relate, the animal released his hold and retired sullenly to the other end of the cage. The keeper showed he was lord of them all, and stood unharmed amid the savage fighting beasts, whose teeth were then crimsoned with his and each others blood. From the assembled crowd, which had stood entranced with apprehension at the terrible danger, rose a tremendous cheer with the heroic man richly deserved. The car went on its way as if nothing had happened. That man took a ride which not a single beholder envied.—San Francisco Examiner.

THE CHILDREN'S FRIEND.

Mr. P. T. Barnum is sketched adroitly by a writer in the World of London, who, in the course of his article, notices this pleasant trait of the showman: "A love of children is one of Mr. Barnum's characteristics—a love returned by all his small acquaintances; for who so patient with the little folks? who so fertile in devising amusements for them? who can relate such wonderful stories, improvising when the original narrative is not sufficiently thrilling? who can conjure so fearfully, swallowing watches, making pennies drop out of little curly heads: who can bark like a dog; who, when the babies seize the tail of his coat, can slip out of it so unconsciously, and suddenly perceive he is coatless with such an air of astonishment as sets the small thieves wild with delight; and who but he, has taught every child of his acquaintance to drive like a Jehu?"

THE AVERAGE MAN OF GENERAL INFORMATION.

The average Man of General Information is somewhat peculiar, and is found in various quantities in every community. We meet him on the cars, and find one or two of him in every hotel. You can seldom tell him by his appearance, but if he speak, you recognize him at once by his style of conversation. The moment you speak to him about anything, he commences to give you information. You can't stop him, nor refer to any subject upon which he is not thoroughly convinced he is well posted.

He seems to be passionately fond of asking you how you would prove that we exist, or that we are not all insane, and if you acknowledge your inability to oblige him, he darkly insinuates that there are serious doubts entertained by some philosophers in regard to the existence of the human race, and that it is believed by some, that if mankind does actually exist, it is quite probable that the entire race is insane.

her crew, all told, would ordinarily be— if in the English vice—160 men. But her peculiar power consisted in the facts, first of all, that to an enemy's battery she would present but a very small target; secondly, that that target was very heavily armoured; thirdly, that from her central battery of four seven-inch guns, she could obtain a nearly all-round fire; and, fourthly, that, for a fight at sea, she was as handy a boat as was ever launched. Remember that our visit was unexpected, and that it was the Mohammedan Sunday, when the men had ceased from work. Descending between decks without a moment's delay we were at once in the central battery. Not a sound was to be heard. So far from this evidence of defective discipline being forthcoming, the ship might have been wholly deserted, so quiet was the place. Not a rope was out of place. You might have eaten your lunch from the decks. The guns were as clean as though English sailors had spent their lives on their preservation. The armourers' stores of Winchester rifles, the cutlasses, the belts, and the pikes were all stacked and placed as on a British man-of-war. Had it not been for the fez which a motionless marine who guarded the captain's cabin wore I might have imagined I was on board her Britannic Majesty's ship Pallas. But this was a Turkish war vessel, as we now found when a bugle sounded, and 200 men came springing into the battery. Yet here, again, was food for astonishment: Their naked feet made the only noise we heard—not a word was spoken. The ship was preparing for action; belts were being buckled on, the magazine opened, the guns loosed, the men were at quarters, and yet not a sound save the word of command. Then came the order for "independent firing" at a supposed enemy—fortunately for our ears no powder being used—and instantly the huge guns were trained and run out, "fired," loaded, brought to bear in this direction and that, till we were, to all appearance, in the midst of a general action. It was then that I received ocular demonstration that these stories of the Turkish fleet which Pera had told me were but silly inventions. No crew in the world could have surpassed these men of the Fethi Bolend. I have seen many a European man-of-war in which the men were not half so smart.

A Story of the Curfew.

To many hearts in the old country that cherish its traditions, the curfew recalls a story of love's devotion.

In the time of Cromwell a young soldier, for some offence was condemned to die, and the time of his death was fixed "at the ringing of the curfew." Naturally such a doom would be fearful and bitter to one in the years of his hope and prime, but to this unhappy youth death was doubly terrible, since he was soon to have been married to a beautiful lady whom he had long loved.

The lady, who loved him ardently in return, had used her utmost efforts to avert his fate, pleading with the judges and even with Cromwell himself, but all in vain. In her despair she tried to bribe the old sexton not to ring the bell, but she found that impossible. The hour drew near for the execution. The preparations were completed. The officers of the law brought forth the prisoner, and waited, while the sun was setting for the signal from the distant bell-tower.

To the wonder of everybody it did not ring. Only one person at that moment knew why. The poor girl herself, half wild with the thought of her lover's peril, had rushed unseen up the winding stairs and climbed the ladder into the belfry loft and seized the tongue of the bell.

The old sexton was in his place, prompt to the fatal moment. He threw his weight upon the rope, and the bell, obedient to his practised hand, pealed and swung to and fro in the tower. But the brave girl kept her hold, and no sound issued from the metallic lips.

Again and again the sexton drew the rope, but with desperate strength the young heroine held on. Every movement made her position more fearful,

No more uncomfortable fashion eyer was devised, for not only are the limbs confined by the binding dress, but the wearer must constantly concern herself about the condition of the bodice, that portion being in incessant danger of turning itself up behind, wringing side out, like an umbrella in a wind storm.

THE COUNTRY TEACHER.

A little town, no matter what its name, in Canada has a school mistress who should never lack for a situation in case she is ever permitted to leave her present one. One of her big boys asked to escort her home from singing-school one night, and was politely mitigated. He tried to get even with the teacher he loved, but could not win, by playing tricks in school hours, neglecting his studies, putting pins in the seats of his fellows, and running to slide down hill. The mistress bore with him till patience was exhausted, and then called him up and gave him a sound flogging. The boy made complaint at home, and told the cause. The parents could have said amen to the whipping, but that a country school-mistress should give their son the sack was too much. They sued the teacher and obtained a judgment for $3. 50, which she paid. The next day in opening school, she made this little speech:

"I have whipped a looby soundly, which pleasure cost only three dollars and a half. Now, if any other of my scholars are inclined to imitate him, they will have the kindness to 'step forward, receive the money and the flogging, and then we will go on with our studies. I am here to instruct you, not to be courted."

There has been no trouble in that school since, nor any attempt by the school lads to play the gallant with the teacher. She begins a new term soon with salary increased, and on the crest of public favor.

Chicago seamen get $1.25 per day for the round trip.

If you undertake to ventilate any pet theory of your own, he breaks in upon you in such a manner that you are subdued at once, and gives you the information you were about to show him you were possessed of; and does it in a way which leaves no room for doubt that he believes he is imparting knowledge which is new to you.

If you converse with him upon political matters you are promptly made to feel that in his opinion you are sadly ignorant, and that you are morally bound to appear grateful to him for the vast amount of valuable information he imparts. If you agree with him upon any public question, and undertake to give reasons for your belief, he comes down upon you like an avalanche with "Well, yes, that's true enough, but the main point is so and so," or the fact that Julius Caesar or somebody else did or said this or that, or the result of something he finds in history is the convincing and important argument that should be used.—From New Dominion Monthly for May.

DEPRESSION IN THE STATES.

"Anything like the present depression in America was never before experienced. Those who are not actual witnesses of it cannot form the slightest idea of its destructive results. To say that tens of thousands of mechanics and labourers are thrown out of employment would fall infinitely short of the terrible reality. But it is amongst the mass of labourers and mechanics of various kinds that the effects of the business depression are most perceptible. The advertising columns of the New York, 'dailies' are flooded with offers of competent clerks, salesmen, etc., to work for a mere pittance—a fraction of what they would earn with the utmost ease a few years ago. The streets are literally thronged with crowds of ragged labourers, wandering listlessly about, and evidently weary of their forced inactivity."

Again and again the sexton drew the rope, but with desperate strength the young heroine held on. Every movement made her position more fearful, every sway of the bell's huge weight threatened to fling her through the high tower windows, but she would not let go.

At last the sexton went away. Old and deaf he had not noticed that the curfew gave no peal. The brave girl descended from the belfry, wounded and trembling. She hurried from the church to the place of execution. Cromwell himself was there, and was sending to demand why the bell was silent. She saw him—

"—and her bow,

Lately white with sickening horror,
Glowed with hope and courage now;
At his feet she told her story,
Showed her hands all bruised and torn,
And her sweet young face still haggard
With the anguish it had won.
Touched his heart with sudden pity,
Lit his eyes with misty light.
"Go; your lover lives," cried Cromwell
"Curfew shall not ring to night."

Seeking Blood.

Old Brigham is only one more Monarch who believes, or pretends he has the Lord on his side in a fight with those who oppose him, and is accordingly making preparations for a contest with the Gentiles, who inhabit the Garden of Eden "Out West." Brigham says, it worst comes to worst, the sinners can have all the blood they want, as he relies upon the Supreme Being for support. As usual, we fear the Divine favors thus interpreted, will be found on the side furnished with the heaviest artillery and best commanders.

During the Temperance Reform agitation in Hamilton over 1,200 persons signed the pledge.

THE WAR NEWS.

AMERICAN NEUTRALITY.

NEW YORK, May 6.—The Department of State has not yet been officially informed through the proper Russian source of the existence of war between Russia and Turkey, the latter, it will be recollected, made known this fact to the department several days ago. When Russia shall be heard from the department may frame such reply to each as our position toward the belligerents requires. Every proper measure will be taken to strictly observe our neutral relations while yielding no rights of our citizens under treaties in international law. There is reason to believe that the Russian ships will soon depart from our waters. It is not known here that they have done anything contrary to our laws, but on the contrary have strictly respected them.

Vessels loaded with arms and ammunition of American make, intended for Turkey, are sailed under the English flag, are manned by English seamen, are run by English engineers, and are cleared for some British port, such as Gibraltar.

THE CZAR IN MOSCOW.

MOSCOW, May 6.—The Czar, while in Moscow, received a deputation of merchants and German residents who presented to the Empress 25,000 roubles for the wounded.

In his address on Saturday he said:—"Six weeks ago I expressed here the hope of a peaceful solution of the Eastern question. I wish to spare to the utmost the precious blood of my subjects, but my efforts have been in vain. My Kischeneff manifesto announced to the Empire that the moment I forswore had arrived. To-day I am happy to be able to thank my people for their patriotism which has been proved by deeds. Their readiness to undergo sacrifices exceeds our expectations. May God assist us to fulfil our task and bless our troops who are about to engage in a combat for faith, the Empire, and fatherland."

ENGLAND'S POSITION.

The Financier says, a Turkish financial agent will shortly visit London to attempt to raise a few millions of money. The attempt will fail quickly.

The differences between England and Russia relative to the Eastern question are increasing, and an open rupture is probable. Should this occur England's neutrality could no longer be maintained, and would lead to a general European war.

A contractor has been ordered to supply 2,000 horses' stalls, with fittings for setting them up on board hired transports. Ambulance waggons of the newest pattern, bearing the Geneva Cross, are on the wharf of Woolwich Arsenal awaiting shipment to Portsmouth and elsewhere.

The Cabinet is thoroughly united about the protection of British interests, but is divided about what those interests are, and how far our communications with India will be imperilled by the Russian advance in Asia.

THE RUSSIANS SINK A TURKISH IRONCLAD.

RUSTCHUK, May 11.—A Russian battery hitherto masked by a vineyard opened fire to-day on the Turkish monitors near Ibralia. An hour after the commencement of the action, a shell struck a large three-masted ironclad commanded by Hassan Bey. It penetrated the boiler and fired the magazine, she blew up and sunk immediately. The crew and 200 soldiers perished, one man only escaped.

RUSSIA.

Russia is endeavouring to induce the Powers to sign a protest against Lord Derby's answer to Gortschakoff's circular.

CHATTANOOGA, May 10.—The exercises of laying the corner stone of the monument dedicated to the Confederate dead were performed to-day with Masonic rites. A detachment of United States troops participated. People from all parts of the Union joined in decorating the Confederate graves amidst the utmost harmony and good feeling.

A Times Raleigh, N. C., special says:—"The election of aldermen on Monday shows that the people are growing independent of party. This feeling is increased throughout the State. The Republican party is in better condition than at any time since 1872; The Southern policy of Hayes has caused this change.

At the meeting of the Albany Canal Board, Resolutions were adopted, reducing the rates of toll on peas and beans, staves and headings, coal and iron ore, lumber, salt manufactured in this State, and all up freight, except foreign salt, in accordance with the resolution of the Legislature. A resolution was adopted, abolishing the toll on furs and peltries, pork, beef, bacon, lard oil, wool, cornmeal, dried fruits, cotton, manufactured tobacco, hemp, clover, and grass seed, hops, domestic spirits, leather, bar and pig iron, lead, coffee, live cattle, hog, sheep, domestic woollens and domestic cottons. The new rates of toll took effect on the 11th.

FOREIGN.

PARIS, May 11.—The editor of the Radical has been sentenced to two months' imprisonment and a fine of 2,000 francs for insulting the army. The editor of Rochefort's Lanterne has received a similar sentence for articles subversive of social order. The Socialistic movement at Lyons is assuming greater dimensions, the Government resolved to oppose it energetically.

ROME, May 11.—The Pope received to-day pilgrims from Canada and Rhode Island. They presented him with large sums of money.

BRITAIN.

A meeting representing all the ship-building yards of Glasgow, Greenock, Port Glasgow, and Cumbarton resolved, in view of the continuous strike of the shipwrights, to inaugurate a general lock-out on the 19th inst.

The Queen has expressed her desire that the Albert Medal, hitherto only bestowed for gallantry in saving life at sea, shall be extended to similar actions on land, and that the first medals struck for this purpose shall be conferred on the heroic rescuers of the Welsh miners.

THE NORTH-WEST.

The St. Paul Pioneer-Press on the 29th ult., has the following upon Mr. Laimie's party of emigrants:—"One of the stirring events of the time it St. Paul was the arrival on Friday of an immense colony of people destined for permanent settlement in Manitoba. The mere transit of a large body of emigrants through St. Paul would scarcely call for unusual mention, but when four or five hundred people of the better class of society, and all in independent circumstances, are found en route for new homes in British America, it forms an event which attracts more than ordinary attention. The emigration party alluded to was formed in New England and was made up of Canadians and residents of the Eastern States, and as they were all financially far above any similar body of families usually seeking homes in the North-West, the Province of Manitoba is to be congratulated upon so valuable an acquisition to its population."

The Colonists are alarmed at the defenceless condition of the colony, with the Russian fleet within a few days' sail.

BUSINESS IN THE UNITED STATES.

Business prospects in the South and Western States seem to be looking up. From late accounts it would appear that the manufacture of all kinds of agricultural implements, tools, glassware, shelf-hardware, and furniture is being conducted on an extensive scale at Louisville, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh and other great manufacturing centres. Numbers of mechanics have been thus afforded employment, and an astonishing impetus given to local trade. Orders for various wares kept coming in and hotels are filled with merchants making spring purchases. Some of the firms assert that the Centennial has been means of increasing their business to very large extent.

The Graphic says, bad as the times here, New York is prosperous compared with San Francisco, which is really in a deplorable condition. The collapse of the mining bubble has affected most disastrously the condition of the city. With the exception of a few independent operators, the whole middle class is to have been literally beggared. The certainty of mining investments in San Francisco only repeats the experience of New York and Boston. This applies where the mines are worked by companies. The whole system is rotten, if this industry is to thrive in the future some machinery must be devised which will give some assurance of fair play to investors.

THE BRITISH FLEET.

"According to the latest admiralty returns, Great Britain is represented in the Mediterranean by seventeen men-of-war, besides several smaller vessels; but these, two ironclads, the Heracles, Trinidadi, are now on their way home. The Alexandra, bearing the flag of Admiral Hornby, now holds the Mediterranean command. The latter has with him eight other ironclads, namely, Monarch, Hotspre, Pallas, Resea, Robert, Sultan, Swiftsure and Devotion. The last mentioned is the most heavily armed and armoured turret ship in the whole of the Mediterranean waters, while the Alexandra, on the other hand, stands unrivalled as a broadside ironclad.

THE EXPRESS.

NAPANEE, MAY 18th, 1877.

The celebration of the Queen's birthday at Petersburg, W. Va., is to be of an international character, under the immediate patronage of Earl Dufferin, Sir Edward Thornton, Governor Kemper, the British consuls of New York, Baltimore, and Norfolk, Mayor Cameron of Petersburg, the presidents of the North American St. George's Unions, of the United Saledonian Associations and of the various British organizations throughout the States and Canada. Large delegations are expected from all parts of the continent, and the arrangements have been made on a scale commensurate with the influence and wealth of the celebrants and the exalted private and public character of the first lady in Europe.

The liquor law just passed by the Oregon Legislature will take the palm for boldness and originality of conception among the many extraordinary performances in that line. It is a license law, but instead of licensing sellers it licenses consumers. Every man who intends to drink intoxicating liquors is required to pay $5 for a tax to do so. This he must show to the saloon-keeper every time he wants to get a drink, and the latter is forbidden under sharp penalties to sell to any one not having a license to drink.

The opponents of the Dunkin Bill in the county of Brant have made a move to quash it. The objection is taken on the ground that section 3 of the Temperance Act was not complied with, and on other grounds. Section 3 enacts that the by-law may be submitted to the electors when thirty or more duly qualified electors of any municipality—or if the by-law is for a county, then of each municipality in the county—at any time by requisition in form appended to the Act or to like effect, signed by them, and delivered on their behalf to the clerk of the municipality, may require that any by-law which the Municipal Council thereof attempts to raise a few millions of money. The attempt will fail quickly.

The differences between England and Russia relative to the Eastern question are increasing, and an open rupture is probable. Should this occur England's neutrality could no longer be maintained, and would lead to a general European war.

A contractor has been ordered to supply 2,000 horses' stalls, with fittings for setting them up on board hired transports. Ambulance waggons of the newest pattern, bearing the Geneva Cross, are on the wharf of Woolwich Arsenal awaiting shipment to Portsmouth and elsewhere.

THE RUSSIANS SINK A TURKISH IRONCLAD.
RUSTCHUK, May 11.—A Russian battery hitherto masked by a vineyard opened fire to-day on the Turkish monitors near Ibralia. An hour after the commencement of the action, a shell struck a large three-masted ironclad commanded by Hassan Bey. It penetrated the boiler and fired the magazine, she blew up and sunk immediately. The crew and 200 soldiers perished, one man only escaped.

RUSSIA.
Russia is endeavouring to induce the Powers to sign a protest against Lord Derby's answer to Gortschakoff's circular. Up to the present moment not a single journal in Europe has received permission from Russia to send a correspondent to the headquarters of the Russian army.

All the fort garrisons of the Baltic ports have been made up to their full strength. The mobilized army of the North is concentrated on the Baltic coast. The Finnish merchant fleet will not leave the Baltic this year, as usual, in view of any eventualities which may arise.

The Jews in Jassy have been warned that if they continue prayers in their synagogues for the success of the Turks they will be severely punished.

A force resembling the German Landwehr will shortly be called out in Russia for the defence of the shores of the Baltic and Black Sea. It is intended to organize rifle companies in every Russian town, so that every man capable of bearing arms may be drilled.

A revolt has broken out in the Crimea. The Tatars have occupied the road from Simferopol.

The insurrection in the Caucasus is far from being put down. It causes the Russian Government much anxiety and inconvenience, and threatens to increase.

A telegram from St. Petersburg, says, "Lord Loftus handed the Russian Government Lord Derby's reply to Gortschakoff's circular. Russia does not intend to reply."

TURKISH VICTORY.
On Wednesday May 11th the Russians attempted to cross the Danube at Reni. They threw a bridge over the river, but were met by the Turkish infantry and artillery, assisted by three gunboats. The bridge of boats was broken, and a large number of Russians were killed and captured. The Russians were completely defeated. There is great rejoicing in Constantinople.

A HOLY WAR.
CONSTANTINOPLE, May 9.—In a few days the annual holy pilgrim caravan will leave Constantinople for Mecca, laden with costly presents for the Mohammedan shrines. The Sheikh al Islam gave to the leader, who has been this time appointed by the Sultan himself, instructions to proclaim in all the cities he passed through that Russia, who persecutes the Christians herself for not conforming to the orthodox faith, was now intent upon driving all the believers in Islamism from Europe. The Sultan has therefore resolved to call all the faithful to a holy war against Russia.

The Colonists are alarmed at the defenceless condition of the colony, with the Russian fleet within a few days' sail. A public meeting in Victoria has been suggested to devise means of safe protection with the assistance of the Imperial force available.

ICELANDIC NEWSPAPER.

A type foundry in St. Paul lately furnished the types for the Francveit, an Iceland newspaper to be published in the Iceland colony at Ginnli. This will be the first newspaper published on the continent in the Icelandic language. The preparation of the types required the greatest care. They are in the Roman alphabet, but with a great many peculiarities in regard to accentuation, and are of a very antiquated form. The Icelandic language is something like the Norwegian language as it was spoken about a thousand years ago.

THE UNITED STATES NAVY.

(From the Chicago Inter Ocean.)

Washington, April 24.—Your correspondent had an interview with Admiral Porter, the head of the Navy, in regard to the condition of the United States navy; its ability to protect American commerce against the privateers that might be sent out to destroy merchant vessels in case the European war became general, and its comparative strength in relation to the other great maritime Powers of the world.

Admiral Porter says:—"Our navy, taken as a whole, is worth nothing, and the sooner the country understands that fact the better. Our officers, as has been proved, are ready to do battle even with the most desperate odds against them, but I do not believe there is any one who would engage one of the ships alluded to, in smooth water or otherwise, unless he wanted to throw his own vessel away."

He further says that the English and Italians have vessels which are so superior to our fleet "as a whale is superior to a shoal of herrings." What ships we have would be useless in war with the great Powers of Europe, for they would soon beset off the ocean."

Since 1861 we have spent $480,000,000 in the construction of vessels, and have not at this moment a single vessel representing the force of a second-class British ship.

"The last vessel of war built by England, and two lately constructed by the Italians, could, either one of them, place our entire navy hors de combat or drive

IN RESERVE.

Besides the insignificant Channel squadron, there are many ships at Portsmouth and in the First Reserve available for the protection of the coast already commissioned and ready to proceed to sea, but they are not attached to any special command.

THE MISSING SHIP.

THE CITY OF BRUSSELS BELAHS HER SHAFT IN THE OCEAN.

New York, May 13.—The City of Brussels was met in mid-ocean by her sister ship, the City of Richmond, which arrived in this port this morning. They sighted the disabled vessel and ran along side at 4 p. m. on Tuesday evening about thirteen hundred miles this side of the Irish coast.

The Brussels was proceeding under canvas to her destination, and reports having broken her shaft on Monday morning, the 29th ult. All well on board.

The officers of the City of Richmond transferred to the disabled vessel such supplies as she is likely to require to complete the voyage, and in mid-ocean the two vessels parted company, the passengers of the Richmond giving a parting cheer for the pilgrims on their mission to the Holy Father.

The officers of the Richmond express the opinion that unless the Brussels is delayed by a calm or head winds she will make her port in eight or ten days from the time they fell in with her, so that by Thursday or Friday next we may expect to hear of her safe arrival on the other side of the Atlantic.

One of the City of Brussels passengers who remained in the City of Richmond, states that when only three days out and during the morning service of the pilgrims a crash was heard shaking the vessel from stem to stern. The engines were immediately stopped, and the shaft was found to be broken. No alarm was felt, and the officers decided to continue the voyage under sail. The vessel was re-entrained by the City of Richmond.

LONDON, May 14.—On Friday the Immans had despatched the Challenger and Blazer from Liverpool, two of the most powerful tugs in the Mersey, in British organizations throughout the State and Canada. Large delegations are expected from all parts of the continent, and the arrangements have been made on a scale commensurate with the influence and wealth of the celebrants and the exalted private and public character of the first lady in Europe.

CARLYLE "SPREADS" HIMSELF ON THE EASTERN QUESTION.

Thomas Carlyle publishes a letter in the Times (6th inst.) on the conflict between Russia and Turkey which produced a marked sensation. Carlyle thinks the present policy of England is drifting the nation war-wards. He most emphatically declares that no British interest whatever needs protecting except the Suez route. He speaks of the ignominy of England in being connected with Turkey at all, and asserts that the only hope for the Turks lies in Russia angering them and gradually drilling them into knowledge and experience, and fitting them to govern themselves. Carlyle adds that the newspaper outcry against the part taken by Russia proceeds from ignorance, egotism, and paltry national jealousy which is no more respectable than the howlings of Bedlam. He says the rumour prevails that Disraeli, despite the Queen's neutrality proclamation, intends to send an English fleet to the Baltic, or do some other feat which shall compel Russia to declare war against England. Latterly the rumour has shifted from the Baltic and become still more sinister on the Eastern side of the scene where a feat is contemplated that will force not Russia only, but all Europe to declare war against us. This, he says, he has come to know as an indisputable fact, and he calls the attention of the friends of their country to his statements lest in a few weeks the maddest thing that the British Government could do should be done, and all Europe be in war.

Since 1861 we have spent $480,000,000 in the construction of vessels, and have not at this moment a single vessel representing the force of a second-class British ship.

"The last vessel of war built by England, and two lately constructed by the Italians, could, either one of them, place our entire navy hors de combat or drive them to the shelter of our forts."

He says that from 1815 to 1842 our navy was the best in the world, because it was ably managed by a board of naval commissioners composed of the three highest officers in the service. He thinks the present system should be abolished and the old system resumed.

"In case of a war between this nation and England, the English navy could batter its way into any of our harbors and destroy them; and any ordinary ship in the British navy could blockade any of our harbours, could keep in every ship that was there, and keep out every ship that was on the outside. One single vessel of the British navy could whip everything we have got. It is no exaggeration to say that the Indefatigable, for instance, could go through our whole navy. Our ships might fire at her all day and not hurt her. Her people would go down to their dinner quietly while we were firing at her. And our ships could not run away from her, because she makes her fourteen knots an hour on a measured mile, and the fastest of our monitors only make eight miles."

We could not afford to engage any of the European navies on equal terms. England has sixty-five ironclads, and France has sixty-eight ironclads, and they are both building all the time. Whenever France builds a ship England goes to work and builds another. Germany is coming up as a naval power, and will finally have a navy certainly equal to that of France. Russia has a very good navy, but it does not compare with the English or French.

Admiral Porter has a very poor opinion of the Turkish navy. He says it is "very much like Chinese forts. The only use it is to fire salutes."

He does not consider our navy in a condition to protect American commerce in case protection is necessary. Our vessels of war are too slow in their sailing qualities.

CHATTANOOGA, May 10.—The exercises of laying the corner stone of the monument dedicated to the Confederate dead were performed to-day with Masonic rites. A detachment of United States troops participated. People from all parts of the Union joined in decorating the Confederate graves amidst the most harmony and good feeling.

A Times' Raleigh, N. C., special says:—The election of aldermen on Monday shows that the people are growing independent of party. This feeling is increased throughout the State. The Republican party is in better condition than at any time since 1872. The Southern policy of Hayes has caused this change.

At the meeting of the Albany Canal Board, Resolutions were adopted, reducing the rates of toll on peas and beans, staves and headings, coal and iron ore, lumber, salt manufactured in this State, and all up freight, except foreign salt, in accordance with the resolution of the Legislature. A resolution was adopted, abolishing the toll on furs and peltries, pork, beef, bacon, lard oil, wool, cornmeal, dried fruits, cotton, manufactured tobacco, hemp, clover, and grass seed, hops, domestic spirits, leather, bar and pig iron, lead, coffee, live cattle, hog, sheep, domestic woolsens and domestic cottons. The new rates of toll took effect on the 11th.

PARIS, May 11.—The editor of the Radical has been sentenced to two months' imprisonment and a fine of 2,000 francs for insulting the army. The editor of Rochefort's Lanterne has received a similar sentence for articles subversive of social order. The Socialistic movement at Lyons is assuming greater dimensions, the Government resolved to oppose it energetically.

BRITAIN

A meeting representing all the ship-building yards of Glasgow, Greenock, Port Glasgow, and Cumbarton resolved, in view of the continuous strike of the shipwrights, to inaugurate a general lock-out on the 19th inst.

The Queen has expressed her desire that the Albert Medal, hitherto only bestowed for gallantry in saving life at sea, shall be extended to similar actions on land, and that the first medals struck for this purpose shall be conferred on the heroic rescuers of the West miners.

THE NORTH-WEST

The St. Paul Pioneer-Press on the 29th ult., has the following upon Mr. Laime's party of emigrants:—"One of the stirring events of the time it St. Paul was the arrival on Friday of an immense colony of people destined for permanent settlement in Manitoba. The mere transit of a large body of emigrants through St. Paul would scarcely call for unusual mention, but when four or five hundred people of the better class of society, and all in independent circumstances, are found en route for new homes in British America, it forms an event which attracts more than ordinary attention. The emigration party alluded to was formed in New England and was made up of Canadians and residents of the Eastern States, and as they were all financially far above any similar body of families usually seeking homes in the North-West, the Province of Manitoba is to be congratulated upon so valuable an acquisition to its population."

The Colonists are alarmed at the decrease in the number of emigrants.

BUSINESS IN THE UNITED STATES

Business prospects in the Southern and Western States seem to be looking up. From late accounts it would appear that the manufacture of all kinds of agricultural implements, tools, glassware, shelf-hardware, and furniture is being conducted on an extensive scale at Louisville Cincinnati, Pittsburg and other great manufacturing centres. Numbers of mechanics have been thus afforded employment, and an astonishing impetus given to local trade. Orders for the various wares kept coming in and the hotels are filled with merchants making spring purchases. Some of the firms assert that the Centennial has been the means of increasing their business to a very large extent.

The Graphic says, bad as the times are here, New York is prosperous compared with San Francisco, which is really in a deplorable condition. The collapse of the mining bubble has affected most disastrously the condition of that city. With the exception of a few inside operators, the whole middle class seem to have been literally beggared. The uncertainty of mining investments in San Francisco only repeats the experience of New York and Boston. This applies to where the mines are worked by companies. The whole system is rotten, and if this industry is to thrive in the future some machinery must be devised which will give some assurance of fair play to investors.

THE BRITISH FLEET.

"According to the latest admiralty returns, Great Britain is represented in the Mediterranean by seventeen men-of-war, besides several smaller vessels; but of these, two ironclads, the Hercules and Triumph, are now on their way home. The Alexandra, bearing the flag of Admiral Hornby, now holds the Mediterranean command. The latter has with him eight other ironclads, namely, the Monarch, Hotspur, Pallas, Research, Robert, Sultan, Swiftsure and Devastation. The last mentioned is the most heavily armed and armoured turret vessel in the whole of the Mediterranean waters, while the Alexandria, on the other hand, stands unrivalled as a broad side ironclad.

THE CHANNEL SQUADRON

which has been cruising off the Spanish coast, and has now been ordered home, consists of but four ironclads—namely, the Minotaur, bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral Seymour; the Black Prince, the Defence, and the Resistance. On the station there is just now a numerous British force, but most of the ships are but gun vessels, the Audacious, Admiral Ryder on board, being the only ironclad of the fleet. There are, besides six corvettes and sloops, nine gun-vessels and several small gunboats. The Detached Squadron for Particular Service, under Admiral Lambert is composed of four or five frigates and several despatch vessels. The

NORTH AMERICA,

and West Indies station, commanded by Vice-Admiral Sir Cooper Key in the Belliphoer, consists of half a dozen corvettes and sloops, and the Pacific station, under Rear Admiral De Horsey, has a similar number of vessels upon it. In the

EAST INDIES

there are ten frigates, corvettes and gun vessels under the command of Sir E. Macdonald, in the Undaunted; and in Australia the commodore has five corvettes and other vessels under his orders. At the

THE NORTH-WEST.

The St. Paul Pioneer is on the hult, has the following upon Mr. lime's party of emigrants:—"One of stirring events of the time it St. ul was the arrival on Friday of an im-ense colony of people destined for per-ment settlement in Manitoba. The re-transit of a large body of emigrants ough St. Paul would scarcely call for usual mention, but when four or five adred people of the better class of iety, and all in independent circum-nces, are found en route for new homes British America, it forms an event ich attracts more than ordinary atten-
The emigration party alluded to was med in New England and was made of Canadians and residents of the stern States, and as they were all fin-ially far above any similar body of ilies usually seeking homes in the rth-West, the Province of Manitoba o be congratulated upon so valuable acquisition to its population."

The Colonists are alarmed at the de-cessive condition of the colony, with Russian fleet within a few days' sail, ublic meeting in Victoria has been gested to devise means of safe-ction with the assistance of the Imp-erial force available.

ICELANDIC NEWSPAPER.
A type foundry in St. Paul lately fur-ished the types for the Frammatic, an land newspaper to be published in the land colony at Gmli. This will be first newspaper published on the con-tinent in the Icelandic language. The paration of the types required the atest care. They are in the Roman habet, but with a great many peculiar-ies in regard to accentuation, and are of ery antiquated form. The Icelandic guage is something like the Norwegian guage as it was spoken about a thou-

THE UNITED STATES NAVY.

(From the Chicago Inter Ocean)
Washington, April 21.—Your cor-respondent had an interview with Al-ber Porter, the head of the Navy, in- regard to the condition of the United it's navy; its ability to protect Amer-ic commerce against the privateers that gh it sent out to destroy merchant sels in case the European war became neral, and its comparative strength in- relation to the other great maritime wers of the world.
Admiral Porter says: "Our navy, ten as a whole, is worth nothing, and o so near the country understands that at the better. Our officers, as has been oved, are ready to do battle even with e most desperate odds against them. I do not believe there is any one o world engage one of the ships all-nd-to, in smooth water or otherwise, un-ss he wanted to throw his own vessel ay."
He further says that the English and lians have vessels which are so supe-rior to our fleet "as a whale is superior o shoal of herrings. What ships we ve would be useless in war with the Triumph, are now on their way home. The Alexandria, bearing the flag of Admiral Hornby, now holds the Mediteranean command. The latter has with him eight other ironclads, namely, the Monarch, Hotspur, Pallas, Research, Robert, Sultan, Swiftsure and Devastation. The last mentioned is the most heavily armed and armed turret vessel in the whole of the Mediterranean waters, while the Alexandria, on the other hand, stands unrivalled as a broad side ironclad.

THE CHANNEL SQUADRON
which has been cruising off the Spanish coast, and has now been ordered home, consists of but four ironclads—namely, the Minotaur, bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral Seymour; the Black Prince, the Defence, and the Resistance. On the station there is just now a numerous British force, but most of the ships are but gun vessels, the Audacious, Admiral Ryder on board, being the only ironclad of the fleet. There are, besides six corvettes and sloops, nine gun-vessels and several small gunboats. The De-tached Squadron for Particular Service, under Admiral Lambert is composed of four or five frigates and several despatch vessels. The

NORTH AMERICA,
and West Indies station, commanded by Vice-Admiral Sir Cooper Key in the Bellerophon, consists of half a dozen corvettes and sloops, and the Pacific station, under Rear-Admiral De Horsey, has a similar number of vessels upon it. In the

EAST INDIES
there are ten frigates, corvettes and gun vessels under the command of Sir E. Macdonald, in the Undaunted; and in Australia the commodore has five cor-vettes and other vessels under his orders. At the

CASE OF GOOD HOPE
and West Coast of Africa there are a dozen vessels to look after British in-terests, under the command of Commodore Sullivan, but none of them are very powerful. Corvettes, gun vessels and gunboats are more useful than heavy ironclads, or big frigates, to protect trade upon the African coast.

IN RESERVE.
Besides the insignificant Channel squa-dron there are many ships at Ports-mouth and in the First Reserve avail-able for the protection of the coast already commissioned and ready to proceed to sea, but they are not attached to any special command.

THE MISSING SHIP.

THE CITY OF BRUSSELS BREAKS HER SHIRT IN MID-OCEAN.
New York, May 13.—The City of Brussels was met in mid-ocean by her sister ship, the City of Richmond, which arrived in this port this morning. They sighted the disabled vessel and ran along-side at 11.30 on Tuesday evening about thirteen hundred miles this side of the Irish coast.

The Brussels was proceeding under en-gine to the destination, and reports having broken her shaft on Monday morning, the 23rd ult. All well on board.

The officers of the City of Richmond transferred to the disabled vessel such supplies as she is likely to require to com-plete the voyage, and in mid-ocean the two vessels parted company, the passen-gers of the Richmond giving a parting cheer for the pilgrims on their mission to the Holy Father.

The officers of the Richmond express the opinion that unless the Brussels is delayed by a calm or head winds she will make her port in eight or ten days from the time they fell in with her, so that by Thursday or Friday next we may expect to hear of her safe arrival on the other side of the Atlantic.

One of the City of Brussels passengers who returned in the City of Richmond, states that when only three days out and during the storming service of the pilgrims,

South side of Thomas Street, in the sixth town of Napanee, butted and bounded as follows:—Com-mencing at the South West angle of said Lot, Lot Number Two, then Northerly on the Westerly limit thereof thirty-three feet, then Easterly parallel with the Southerly limit of said Lot, sixty-six feet more or less to the Easterly limit thereof, thence southerly in said Easterly limit thirty-three feet to the South East angle of said Lot, thence westerly along the Southerly limit thereof sixty six feet more or less to the place of beginning.

The Dwelling House which is of Brick, and almost new, has all the modern improvements and the outbuildings and appurtenances generally are on a corresponding scale.

The property is one of the most valuable in the Town of Napanee, and as a family residence is surpassed by none in the County.

The property will be sold subject to prior Mortgages, of which a statement will be given at the time of sale, conditions of sale made known at the time of sale. For further particulars apply to

BACON'S EATHAN ALLEN

PEDIGREE.

Bacon's Ethan Allen was sired by Old Ethan Allen, out of Black Hawk, by Sherman, by Jus-tice Morgan, by True Briton, an imported horse from England.

Ethan Allen's dam was by Watkins' Highland-er, by Young Messenger, by imported Messenger. The dam of Watkins' Highlander was a young mare known as Nancy Dowson, from Kentucky. Highlander was the sire of the first Kentucky hunter: Grand sire of Eben Temple, Eben First and many other noted horses. The dam of Bacon's Ethan Allen was a mare of great beauty, speed and endurance, dark bay, to hand high, full mane and tail, she was mother of Path-finder, a noted Stallion owned by Geo. Benedict of Oneida Co., N. Y.; she was also dam to Andrew Jackson, Green Mountain Morgan and Black Hawk, and many others.

No Stock in the State of New York stands high-er than this.

This horse took the 1st Premium at the National and Horse Fair at Watertown, the best Stallion also, for the best Family of Colts on Exhibition. This Stallion is one of the best mated horses in the world, and is considered by good judges to be one of the best stock horses in the State of New York. Also, 1st Premium at the Midland Central Fair, Kingston, 1876.

The following horses were sired by him
Continental, sold for $1,500, at four years old, the present owner has no colts left.
The Pulver Colt was sold for $2,500. A few years ago.
The Rogers' Colts, sold for $2,500. A pair of 3 years old Colts sold for $1,500, and after-wards one of them sold for $2,000.
The Kellogg Colt, at 4 years, sold for $2,800. Bonaire sold for "Pocahontas" half sister of Ethan Allen, sold for "Eric's Mare" when three years old, and sold for $3,000, and afterwards her owner received $2,000.
Rufus White four years old, 2 to 3 hands, sold for $1,000.
The Greer Colt. Four years old, sold for $1,000. Matched Colts, four and five years, sold last fall for $1,000.

Notice to Subscribers!

A misunderstanding with some of our subscribers, has arisen in regard to the meaning conveyed by the wording of certain circulars, sent to them by Mr. T. W. Casey, late proprietor of the Express, asking for payment of arrears of subscriptions. We wish it distinctly understood, that Mr. Casey's connection with the Express, expired on the 18th day of October 1876, and all subscriptions due him, expired with that date. We hope that our subscribers will not infer from the said circulars, that we are, at this early date, pushing them for their subscriptions.

Grand Lodge of P. B's. of B. N. A.

The Grand Lodge of Prentice Boy's, of B. N. A., will be held at Belleville, on the 12 of June, opening at 2 p. m.

Personal.

The Hon. R. J. Cartwright, has found time from his arduous duties to visit his friends in and around Napanee.

Juvenile Temple.

The following officers of the Napanee Juvenile Temple were installed on Friday evening, May 11th:—Myron Mills, O.T.; Tilda Waller, V.T.; Ida Aishton, Sec.; Willie Tobey, F. Sec.; Fred Bell, Treas.; Frank Botting, M.; John Rose, G.; W. George, S.; John Belch, Chap.; Maud Rogers, R.H.S.; Maggie Conger, L.H.S.; Frank Aishton, D.M.

Temperance Demonstration.

This affair on Wednesday was not very successful. The day was fine. A small street parade, plenty of good music, flags flying over several buildings, and everybody sober—but we suppose our temperance friends will count that a great success. Professor Hulett drew a focus on the delegates in front of the Brisco House and secured an excellent picture. Chief Marshal, Allen, being conspicuous in the foreground. A free lecture attracted an immense crowd at the M. E. Church in the evening.

Medicinal Whiskey.

M. B. Mallory, druggist, was on Saturday fined $20, and costs $10.50 or 15 days hard labor, for selling 12 ozs. of whiskey for medicinal purposes to several persons according to law. Appealed. Grange & Bros., druggists, fined $20, costs $6.70 or fifteen days hard labor, for selling liquor in a larger quantity than 12 ozs. without a doctor's certificate. This firm was also charged with selling 12 ozs. the same as in Mallory's case. Judgment reserved till 7th June. DeJor & Scott, druggists, similar charge to Mallory. Judgment reserved until 7th June. Also charged with selling larger quantity than 12 ozs. without doctor's certificate. Fined $25 and $6.25 or 15 days in gaol at hard labor. Appealed. Most of the purchasers wanted whiskey for "putting on camphor." We had no idea this was such a favourite panacea.

The Twenty-Fourth.

Pleasure seekers will have a chance for a day's sport in all directions. Mr. M. W. Strange, Jr., owner of the Zitella, of Kingston, offers to match his yacht against any one, or all, of the Belleville squadron to sail a race at Kingston for a sweepstake of $25 each. The Belleville Yacht Club have accepted the management of the second class yacht race to be given by the Cricket Club, for a purse of $25, over the Bg Bay course, as the yachts will comprise the Revolute, Kathleen, Surprise, Katie Gray, and Enid a very exciting race is anticipated. The members of the Belleville Cricket Club will also have a picnic at Massassaga Point. Napanee will probably be deserted, but the whole of our yachting fleet will be afloat. Com. Jack Dickens has stepped a new mast in the Pioneer, Capt. Johnnie Mackay of the Lizzie, Vice Com. Lee—Amorette, and a host of smaller fry—in fact every craft that can spread a sheet, and every man that can pull an oar will be in readiness. The little steamer Shannon—the only live boat in our harbour—will run excursions and prove very comfortable for a short trip. Capt. Johnson will do the agreeable, and the affable John Bowey, will assist the ladies in loading and unloading their trunks and 'fixins'.

The Rev. Elder Hawkins, of Chatham, lectured in the New C. M. Church, last Wednesday evening on 'Slavery from experience' to a disagreeably slim audience, considering the quality of the lecture, and qualifications of the lecturer, who, during the delivery sang some very appropriate melodies, Geo. Britherton, Esq., in the chair. Music and choir provided by Mrs. Minnie Paul York.

I see by the large posters in different places, that the Rt. Rev. Dr. O'Brien, E. C. Bishop of Kingston, is expected to lecture here next Sunday, there is no doubt but he will meet with more success than Elder Hawkins, notwithstanding a quarter is required, whether the matter be more learned or not. Titles have a good effect now-a-days.

Yours

BUMPKIN.

MANITOBA.

(Correspondence of the Express)

Red River falling rapidly. Weather delightful for spring work. Emigrants beginning to come in from the U. States and Canada. The last boat brought down 400. The last boat from Winnipeg, brought up 1,300 sacks of flour for the Mennonites nearest West Lynn. Two men from Ontario have bought about 900 acres of land near Emerson for which to grow flax, they expect to break up 300 acres this summer. Scrip that was selling for $40 and $50 last fall is now worth about $100 and hard to get.

Two ferries now run across the Red River at Emerson, one near the Hudson Bay Post, West Lynn, and the other near the Minnesota store.

THE DANUBE.

THE GREAT RIVER WHICH FLOWS THROUGH THE SCENE OF THE EASTERN WAR.

The Danube from from its source to its mouth, in an air line, is 1,020 miles, but the stream is so tortuous that its actual length is 1,820 miles, and it traverses nearly 22 degrees of latitude and 5½ of longitude. The Danube and its tributaries drain an area of 300,000 square miles.

The stream varies from the width of a mile to about 180 yards, and with a depth, as far as can be ascertained from the violence of the current, of from 800 to 1,000 fathoms. The mountains on either side are very lofty, nearly 5,000 feet high those on the Austrian being 1,000 feet higher than those on the Russian side. The mountains rise nearly sheer for about 3,000 feet above the stream, and where not perpendicular, rather overhang the water. When the river is low the sharp craggy points of subaqueous rocks begin to show themselves above the stream, and between these the passage is most narrow, winding, and shallow, and in fact can only be passed by steamers especially built for the purpose, of light draught of water, four paddle wheels, and immense power, and even these steamers make use of a channel cut through the ledge.

The rapidity of its current in its upper course, its tortuous windings, the shallowness of the water in the portion which flows through Hungary, and in the outlets into the Black Sea, and the reefs, rapids, and whirlpools which mark its course at many points, have rendered the navigation of the Danube so difficult that its commercial use has not yet been fully developed. The introduction of steam in 1839 inaugurated a new era in its history. By the convention of November 7, 1857, between the States through which the river flows vessels of all nations were allowed to ascend the Danube from its mouth to any point above, and navigation between the different points was reserved to the subjects of the countries along its banks. The treaty of March 13, 1871, authorized the levying of a provisional tax on all commercial vessels for paying for the removal of the remaining obstructions at the Iron Gate, in case that work should be undertaken.

TURKISH TACTICS ON THE SEA.

As to the Black Sea, the same does not exist for the Turks to their ports as is imposed upon owing to the former having the command of the Black Sea. They have a clad fleet, sufficient in number, well equipped with their wooden vessels, blockade, if necessary, the whole Russian coast. Properly watched a vessel ought to be allowed to enter of a Russian port; and though a fine fleet of merchant steamers at disposal, the Turks ought to be able to prevent the Russian Government from getting any supplies to its various armies except overland. With vessels stationed here and there, a squadron of fast-steaming ironclads round the shore, threatening coast towns, attacking the fortifications and destroying the Government as the Turks if they understand it of their fleet will certainly do, the Russians will have to retain considerable forces in the south for their own defense. Recent intelligence from Odessa that the army destined for this war consists of at least 270,000 men, and 200,000 at the present time are stationed near that town, the remainder distributed in detachments all shore to the northward and eastward as the mainland on the other side of the Crimea. This is a large force, but ships have the advantage, present day, of steam, and can about with far greater celerity than Feints and threatened attacks, maintain positions with small portions of their fleet will serve to draw off from other places whilst the main body of war vessels is preparing for a upon the towns thus left only defended. This is the sort of war would be undertaken by a British fleet under similar circumstances, and the Turkish supposed to have studied in school. They possess amongst the best of the iron-clad fleet just the craft to suit a dashing command, vessels of light draught, heavily armed with mounting guns of large calibre, and in good well.

ADMIRAL HOBART PASHA.

Admiral Hobart Pasha, of the navy, whose exploit in running Russian batteries at Galatz has been in our cable dispatches, is well known in Washington. He is an Englishman, and was one of the most successful and most annoying blockade runners of our civil war, which service he was employed formerly wealthy but recently in London firm of Alexander Collier Hobart was a captain in the British and took advantage of a leave of absence granted him by the English Government to go into the blockade running for Collier & Co. When this matter came to the knowledge of the Admiralty he was suspended from his rank in the British navy. There entered the Turkish service, and being invested with the rank of Pasha was made a pasha by an Ottoman firman. He next became conspicuous in checking the rebellion in Crete, his knowledge of the blockade running was of great service to him in venting the Greeks from furnishing supplies of arms and ammunition to the insurgents. By a subsequent council of the Lords of the Admiralty has been restored to his rank and in the British navy.—Boston Herald.

BEAVER LAKE.

(From our Correspondent.)

MR. EDITOR.—If you ever go by the way of Beaver Lake—but for all I know you may be passing very often—then I would wish to drop a line of caution. All travellers must be very careful of the road, especially if so unfortunate as to have weak horses or oxen, as if your animal should fall, very little mercy would be shown towards him. A man was recently travelling on the road near Beaver Lake, his animal fell, and without delay, a messenger was sent for a neighbor's oxen, a rope or chain being attached to the poor brutes neck, he was drawn along and off the rough road, while yet there was life. A little more humanity would have been shown (if the case was hopeless) to have put an end to the poor brutes misery first, and then remove him. It is often said "Let the Devil have his due" and I will say, that the leaders in this transaction were non-residents, and the Lakers pity the man who could act so cruel towards those animals which are such useful servants to man.

Its vessels make the voyage from Vienna to Constantinople in seven days. This company employs 150 vessels on the Lower Danube, and these are now all laid up by the hostilities.

LORD DERBY'S REPLY TO GORTSCHAKOFF.

LONDON, May 7.—Lord Derby's answer to Gortschakoff's circular note is in the form of a note from Lord Derby to Lord Loftus, the British ambassador to St. Petersburg. The following is the text:—
"London, May 1st, 1877.

"I forwarded your Excellency on the 24th ult. a copy of Prince Gortschakoff's circular announcing that the Emperor had given orders to cross the frontiers of Turkey. Her Majesty's Government have received this communication with deep regret. They cannot accept the statements and conclusion with which Prince Gortschakoff has accompanied it in justifying the resolution thus taken. The protocol to which her Majesty's Government at the instance of Russia recently became a party, required from the Sultan no fresh guarantees for the reform of his Administration. With the view of enabling Russia the better to abstain from isolated action and the attendant interference taken in common by the Powers in the condition of the Christian population of Turkey, it went on to declare that the Powers would watch carefully the manner in which the promises of the Ottoman Government were carried into effect, and that should their hopes were more be disappointed they reserved the right to consider in common the means they might deem best fitted to secure the peace and well being of the Christians.

"To these declarations of the intentions of the Powers the consent of the Porte was not asked or required. The Porte no doubt has thought fit, unfortunately in the opinion of her Majesty's Government, to protest against the expressions in question as implying encroachment on its independence. But while so doing and while declaring that they cannot consider the protocol as having any binding character on Turkey the Turkish Government have again affirmed their intention of carrying into execution the reforms. Her Majesty's Government cannot therefore admit, as contended by Gortschakoff, that the answer of the Porte rendered all

THE WAR AND ENGLISH POLITICS.

A London special states that the intentions of Mr. Gladstone in the House of Commons are rallying to his support party new to European politics, one who favors Russia as opposed to Turkey. Tories believe that this war will give a new lease of life. They point to the fact that, once engaged in a war, public opinion in England has always erred in the opposition. Even the infatuation with opium war so discreditably to Great Britain, lost Cobden and Bright seats in Parliament for opposing Derby and Disraeli are quite willing the Liberals should commit themselves to the side of Russia, as they know the traditions of the British Empire its great interests will lie on the side of Turkey before the conflict is very far advanced.

THE GOTHENBURG SYSTEM.

Mr. Duff, British consul at Gothenburg, gives the following opinion as to the working of the licensing system that town:—"The Gothenburg Licenser Company, or Boleg, had a good objective view when established; but the system it appears, has proved a failure owing the way it has been carried out, and present only a money-making concern realizing a large amount annually, which forms a considerable income to the town. The drunkenness in Gothenburg is given among the better classes, and lower orders consider the Company's tail shops as their privileged modes. Tail shops are situated in the most frequented situations, right in the face of laborers and seamen, and I consider a great encouragement and temptation to drinking."

THE RUSSIAN FLEET, IN THE PACIFIC.

In addition to three heavily armed steam corvettes, each manned by 200 men, there are three small but powerful steam sloops, all lying together thirty miles north of San Francisco. These Russian vessels have been in the present position for upwards of months, and, according to the official reports, were awaiting the arrival of four corvettes. It is added that the war squadron is meant for an attack on Vancouver's Island, as well as to prey on British shipping, in the event of a break of war between England and Russia. Whether this is the case or it can scarcely be contended in this stance that the ships of war have been sent to San Francisco from the American protect Russian interests or to avoid overwhelming strength of the Turkish fleet in the Mediterranean and the Black Sea. Our own force on this Pa-

The Bath Liquor Case.

Inspector vs. Frank H. Priest of Bath. The defendant was fined £20 and £7.80 costs, or 15 days in gaol at hard labor. The magistrates were convinced that Mr. Priest had no intention of violating the law, but from the wording of the Act, no other decision was admissible. In future druggists should register all sales of alcohol.

Forest Fire.

Terrible bush fires are raging in New Hampshire, New York state and other places, houses, mills lumber &c., destroyed, many families rendered homeless, loss several millions. In the townships of Hinchinbrooke and Malden, back of Kingston, bush fires are burning, Saw Mills and several farm buildings have been destroyed.

The Base Ball Match.

We wish to remind our readers of the grand base ball match between the Clippers of Belleville, and our Silver Leafs, to come off on the 24th, of May on the Belleville ground. There will be the same interest centered in this match, as in that between Guelph and London. Arrangements will be made to have a return match the fourth of June, on the home ground. Don't fail to see it, as excellent play is expected.

Caterpillars.

These pests are to be seen in myriads, crawling up the trunks of maple and other ornamental and fruit trees, on the streets, and in our gardens. A judicious application of soft soap around the trunks, or a ring of tar, will stop their perigrinations. When once in the tree, coal oil applied from a sprinkler, will physic the "varmints" or perhaps camphor and whiskey would be still better. Exterminators should be at work before sunrise or after sunset.

There is much ado among the Lakers about some person (that is I suppose him to be a person), 'Gohebydd o lan y llyn.' This name to them is very strange, and they are certain there is no one with that title living in their neighborhood. They also wish to know what right has anybody (from another settlement) to make himself so busy about their affairs, they tell me nothing occurs in this locality but what the EXPRESS must know all about it, and what that paper publishes, everybody reads. At a gathering, that may be called the Pupils Convention, among the scholars of Beaver Lake School, a general enquiry was made, if any person present knew this "novelist," but I heard of no one being wiser of their scholastic inquiry. I gave my advice, secretly, for these anxious parties to drop you a line and become subscribers, then you would perhaps, let them know the meaning of the name and who is the person. I know that would be a great inducement. Hunter can linger no longer at present.

They cannot accept the statements and conclusion with which Prince Gortschakoff has accompanied it, justifying the resolution thus taken. The protocol to which her Majesty's Government at the Congress of Russia recently became a party, required from the Sultan no fresh guarantees for the reform of his Administration. With the view of enabling Russia the better to abstain from isolated action and the assumed interest taken in common by the Powers in the condition of the Christian population of Turkey, it went on to declare that the Powers would watch carefully the manner in which the promises of the Ottoman Government were carried into effect, and that should their hopes once more be disappointed, they reserved the right to consider in common the means they might deem best fitted to secure the peace and well being of the Christians.

"To these declarations of the intentions of the Powers the consent of the Porte was not asked or required. The Porte no doubt has thought fit, unfortunately in the opinion of her Majesty's Government, to protest against the expressions in question as implying encroachment on its independence. But while so doing and while declaring that they cannot consider the protocol as having any binding character on Turkey the Turkish Government have again affirmed their intention of carrying into execution the reforms. Her Majesty's Government cannot therefore admit, as contended by Gortschakoff, that the answer of the Porte removed all hope of deference to the wishes and advice of Europe, and all security for the application of the reforms, nor necessarily precluded the possibility of the conclusion of peace with Montenegro or of an arrangement for mutual disarmament. Her Majesty's Government still believe that with patience and moderation on both sides these objects might not improbably have been attained. Gortschakoff, however, asserts that all opening is now closed for attempts at conciliation. The Emperor is resolved to undertake the task of obtaining by coercion that which the unanimous efforts of the powers failed to obtain by persuasion, and he expresses his Majesty's conviction that this step is in accordance with the sentiments and interest of Europe. It cannot be expected that her Majesty's Government should agree in this view."

Lord Derby then speaks of the requirements of the Treaty of Paris and Russia's declaration of war, and concludes thus:—"It is impossible to foresee the consequences of such an act. Her Majesty's Government would willingly have refrained from any observations with regard to it, but as Gortschakoff seems to assume in his declaration addressed to all the Governments of Europe that Russia is acting in the interests of Great Britain and of the other Powers, they feel bound to state in a manner equally formal and public that the decision of the Russian Government is not one which can have their concurrence or approval."

At the next meeting of Convocation at the University of London it is intended if possible to carry a resolution praying the Senate to rescind their decision in favour of the admission of women to degrees in medicine. Upwards of 200 medical men have signed a petition to the same effect to be presented to the Senate.

THE GOTHENBURG SYSTEM.

Mr. Duff, British consul at Gothenburg, gives the following opinion as to the working of the licensing system in that town:—"The Gothenburg Licensing Company, or Boleg, had a good object in view when established; but the system it appears, has proved a failure owing to the way it has been carried out, and is a present only a money-making concern realizing a large amount annually, which forms a considerable income to the town. The drunkenness in Gothenburg is great even among the better classes, and the lower orders consider the Company's retail shops as their privileged modes. These shops are situated in the most frequented situations, right in the face of the laborers and seamen, and I consider this a great encouragement and temptation to drinking."

THE RUSSIAN FLEET, IN THE PACIFIC

In addition to three heavily armed steam corvettes, each manned by 200 or 250 men, there are three small but useful steam sloops, all lying together some thirty miles north of San Francisco. These Russian vessels have been in their present position for upwards of two months, and, according to the officers were awaiting the arrival of four more corvettes. It is added that the whole squadron is meant for an attack on Vancouver's Island, as well as to prey on British shipping, in the event of a break of war between England and Russia. Whether this is the case or not it can scarcely be contended in this instance that the ships of war have been sent to San Francisco from the Amoor to protect Russian interests or to avoid the overwhelming strength of the Turkish fleet in the Mediterranean and Black Sea. Our own force on this Pacific station is notoriously weak until the arrival of the Shah; and if Russia has a long counted upon England's hostile superiority to her settled plan of attack in Europe and Asia, it is at least a convenient coincidence for her that probably in no other part of the world could so much damage be done to British commerce in a short time by a few small vessels, as in the Pacific Ocean. But there have been a good many convenient coincidences with respect to Russia policy of late.

STEAMSHIPS BY RAILWAY.

The novel enterprise of transporting large steamers across the continent has been successfully carried out within a few weeks. In October, 1876, the Occident & Oriental Steamship Company made contract with Fletcher, Harrison & Co of New York, for the construction of two side-wheel steam-boats, each of the following dimensions: Keel, 210 feet; beam, 32 feet; depth of hold, 10 feet. Each was to have two boilers, one vertical beam condensing engine, with a cylinder 5 inches in diameter and 11 feet length of stroke. The hulls, machinery, an joiner-work were built and fitted together at New York, and when completed the boats were taken to pieces and shipped by rail to San Francisco, and there put together again. The entire weight of the vessels and machinery as shipped was about 800 tons. The steamers are intended to run on San Francisco Bay,—on from San Francisco to Saucalito, thence from San Francisco to San Rafael.

The Rev. Elder Hawkins, of Oshawa, returned in the New C. M. Church, last Wednesday evening on "Slavery from America." One disagreeable climate, and the quality of the lecture, and the delivery sang some very appropriate melodies, Geo. Britherton, Esq., in the choir. Music and choir provided by Mrs. Minnie Paul York.

I see by the large posters in different places, that the Rt. Rev. Dr. O'Brien, Bishop of Kingston, is expected to cure here next Sunday, there is no doubt it he will meet with more success than Elder Hawkins, notwithstanding a quarter required, whether the matter be more or not. Titles have a good effect now-a-days.

Red River falling rapidly. Weather delightful for spring work. Emigrants beginning to come in from the U. States and Canada. The last boat brought down 400. The last boat from Winnipeg, brought up 300 sacks of flour for the Mennonites near West Lynn. Two men from Ontario have bought about 900 acres of land near Emerson for which to grow flax, they expect to break up 300 acres this summer. Scrip that was selling for $40 and 0 last fall is now worth about $100 and 0 to get.

Two ferries now run across the Red River Emerson, one near the Hudson Bay Post, East Lynn, and the other near the Minnesota store.

THE DANUBE.

THE GREAT RIVER WHICH FLOWS THROUGH THE SCENE OF THE EASTERN WAR.

The Danube from its source to its mouth, in an air line, is 1,020 miles, the stream is so tortuous that its actual length is 1,820 miles, and it traverses nearly 22 degrees of latitude and 5½ of longitude. The Danube and its tributaries drain an area of 300,000 square miles.

The stream varies from the width of a mile to about 180 yards, and with a depth, as far as can be ascertained from the silence of the current, of from 800 to 1000 fathoms. The mountains on either side are very lofty, nearly 5,000 feet high on the Austrian being 1,000 feet higher than those on the Russian side. The mountains rise sharply for about 3,000 feet above the stream, and are not perpendicular, rather overhanging the water. When the river is low the sharp craggy points of subaqueous rocks begin to show themselves above the stream, and between these the passage is most narrow, winding, and shallow, and in fact can only be passed by steamers especially built for the purpose, of light draught of water, four paddle wheels, and immense power, and even these steamers make use of a channel through the ledge.

The rapidity of its current in its upper course, its tortuous windings, the shallowness of the water in the portion which flows through Hungary, and in the delta into the Black Sea, and the reefs, shoals, and whirlpools which mark its course at many points, have rendered navigation of the Danube so difficult at its commercial use has not yet been fully developed. The introduction of steam in 1829 inaugurated a new era in its history. By the convention of November 7, 1857, between the States through which the river flows vessels of all nations were allowed to ascend the Danube from its mouth to any point above, its navigation between the different points as reserved to the subjects of the countries along its banks. The treaty of March 13, 1871, authorized the levying of a provisional tax on all commercial vessels for paying for the removal of the

TURKISH TACTICS ON THE BLACK SEA.

As to the Black Sea, the same necessity does not exist for the Turks to defend their ports as is imposed upon Russia, owing to the former having the command of the Black Sea. They have a fine iron-clad fleet, sufficient in number, when supplemented with their wooden vessels, to blockade, if necessary, the whole of the Russian coast. Properly watched, not a vessel ought to be allowed to escape out of a Russian port; and though there is a fine fleet of merchant steamers at its disposal, the Turks ought to be able to prevent the Russian Government from sending any supplies to its various corps d'armees except overland. With enemy's vessels stationed here and there, and a squadron of fast-steaming ironclads sweeping round the shore, threatening the sea coast towns, attacking the fortified posts, and destroying the Government depots, as the Turks if they understand the value of their fleet will certainly do, the Russians will have to retain considerable forces in the south for their own defence. Recent intelligence from Odessa declares that the army destined for this work consists of at least 270,000 men, of which 200,000 at the present time are in quarters near that town, the remainder being distributed in detachments along the shore to the northward and eastward, as far as the mainland on the other side of the Crimea. This is a large force certainly, but ships have the advantage, in the present day, of steam, and can move about with far greater celerity than troops. Feints and threatened attacks upon certain positions with small portions of the fleet will serve to draw off the troops from other places whilst the main body of war vessels is preparing for a descent upon the towns thus left only partially defended. This is the sort of work which would be undertaken by a British fleet in similar circumstances, and the Turks are supposed to have studied in the same school. They possess amongst the vessels of the iron-clad fleet just the sort of craft to suit a dashing commander—vessels of light draught, heavily armed, mounting guns of large calibre, and steaming well.

ADMIRAL HOBART PASHA.

Admiral Hobart Pasha, of the Turkish navy, whose exploit in running by the Russian batteries at Galatz has been told in our cable dispatches, is well known in Washington. He is an Englishman, and was one of the most successful and most annoying of the blockade runners of our civil war, in which service he was employed by the formerly wealthy but recently bankrupt London firm of Alexander Collicie & Co. Hobart was a captain in the British navy, and took advantage of a leave of absence granted him by the English Government to go into the blockade running business for Collicie & Co. When this matter came to the knowledge of the Lords of the Admiralty he was suspended from his rank in the British navy. Thereupon he entered the Turkish service, and, besides being invested with the rank of Admiral, was made a pasha by an imperial firman. He next became conspicuous in checking the rebellion in Crete, where his knowledge of the blockade running business was of great service to him in preventing the Greeks from furnishing supplies of arms and ammunition to the insurgents. By a subsequent decree in council of the Lords of the Admiralty he has been restored to his rank and number in the British navy.—Boston Herald.

CALISTHENICS.

Thought our educational system is, upon the whole, perhaps the most perfect in the world, as far as it has gone, it is by no means complete. Much as has been done during the thirty-three years which have elapsed since Dr. Ryerson began his great work, something still remains to be done before the highest possible result is reached. Thanks to the great man who has shaped and directed our system of elementary instruction, we have been able to suggest to our neighbors some valuable lessons, and to give them some useful hints, which they have not been slow to adopt and improve. There are, however some things which we may learn from them in return. Amongst other things, the Americans appear to excel us in the attention given in public schools, to physical development and training. It is pleasing to know that there is a disposition among our own educators to take a leaf out of their book in this respect. The teachers' excursion to Oswego on the Queen's birthday last year, has, in this respect, already borne valuable fruit.

Nothing, perhaps, in connection with the late meeting of the Teachers' Association in this town was more interesting than the Calisthenic exhibition—an exhibition which was alike creditable both to the teachers and their pupils. Considering the short time which has elapsed since this system of training was introduced into our Napanee schools, the degree of efficiency attained is something surprising; and the utility of this branch of education will be more apparent in years to come than it is at present. The object aimed at is to teach the pupil to execute all those movements which will tend to bring all the muscles, especially those which must need development and strengthening, into play, with promptness, grace and precision. Such training can scarcely fail to do them good and not evil, all the days of their lives.

We suspect this is a matter in which insurance companies, or those who are intrusted with their management and direction, will take a lively interest. Calisthenics and gymnastics benefit such companies in two ways—they tend to lengthen the term of human life by promoting the more symmetrical and complete development of the physical organization, and by giving to those who are judiciously exercised in them, such complete control of their limbs and their senses, as to be able to escape danger and to avoid accidents, by which they would otherwise have been overtaken. Doubtless the enormous sums which have been paid out by the Travellers Life and Accident Insurance Company of Hartford in this neighborhood and throughout this country during the last few years, might have been considerably lessened if the people generally had been more perfectly trained.

It is useless, however, for us to mourn over spilt milk. It is late in the day with many of us, to begin the practise of Calisthenic or gymnastic exercises now; we will never be as agile or beautiful as we might have been, and, what is more to our present purpose, we will not live as long as we might have done, neither will we ever be able to protect ourselves from evil and danger to the extent that was possible once; but it is matter of thankfulness that we can, at a comparatively trifling expense, keep well insured against pecuniary loss from accident, and in the same way fortify our families against the calamity which might result from our sudden and untimely "taking off." Mr. Hanson still conducts the business of the Travellers on the other side of the street, and we would most earnestly advise all our readers to call upon him at once.

NO RISK.

Thomas' Electric Oil! Worth Ten Times its Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

Pain cannot stay where it is used. It is the cheapest Medicine ever made. One dose cures common SORE THROAT. One bottle has cured BRONCHITIS. Fifty cents' worth has cured an OLD STANDING COUGH. One or two bottles cures bad cases of PILES and KIDNEY TROUBLES. Six to eight applications cure any CASE OF EXCORIATED NIPPLES OR INFLAMED BREAST. One bottle has cured LAME BACK of years' standing. Daniel Plank, of Brookfield, Toga County, Pa. says: "I went thirty miles for a bottle of your Oil, which effected a WONDERFUL CURE of a CROOKED LIMB, by six applications." Another who has had ASTHMA for years, says: "I have half of a 50 cent bottle left, and $100 would not buy it if I could get no more."

Rufus Robinson, of Nunda, N. Y., writes: "One small bottle of your ELECTRIC OIL restored the voice where the persons had not spoken above a whisper in FIVE YEARS." Rev. J. Mallory, of Wyoming, N. Y., writes: "Your ELECTRIC OIL cured me of Bronchitis in one week."

It is composed of SIX OF THE BEST OILS THAT ARE KNOWN. Is as good for internal as for external use, and is believed to be immeasurably superior to anything ever made. Will save you much suffering and many dollars of expense.

ORD DERBY'S REPLY TO GORTSCHAKOFF.

LONDON, May 7.—Lord Derby's answer to Gortschakoff's circular note is in the form of a note from Lord Derby to Lord St. Albans, the British ambassador to St. Petersburg. The following is the text:—

"London, May 1st, 1877.
I forwarded your Excellency on the 11th, a copy of Prince Gortschakoff's letter announcing that the Emperor had ordered to cross the frontiers of Russia. Her Majesty's Government received this communication with regret. They cannot accept the terms and conclusion with which Prince Gortschakoff has accompanied it, inflicting the resolution thus taken, in violation of the principles of international law, to which her Majesty's Government at the instance of Russia became a party, required from them no fresh guarantees for the safety of his Administration. With the view of enabling Russia the better to abstain from isolated action and the affirmed to be taken in common by the Powers in violation of the Christian population of Turkey, it was our intention that the Powers would watch carefully the action which the promises of the Russian Government were carried into, and that should their hopes are disappointed they reserved the right to consider in common the means which might best be fitted to secure the well being of the Christians. These declarations of the intentions of the Powers, the consent of the Powers to the consent of the Porte was required. The Porte has thought fit, unfortunately in violation of her Majesty's Government, to test against the expressions in our reply, and to proceed on its independence. But while so doing and declaring that they cannot consider the action as having any binding force on Turkey, the Turkish Government have again affirmed their intention to bring into execution the reforms. Her Majesty's Government cannot therefore admit, as contended by Gortschakoff, that the answer of the Porte removed all all dependence to the wishes and advice of the Powers, and all security for the application of the reforms, nor necessarily preclude the possibility of the conclusion of an arrangement for mutual disarmament. Her Majesty's Government still believe that

THE WAR AND ENGLISH POLITICS.

A London special states that the resolutions of Mr. Gladstone in the House of Commons are rallying to his support a party new to European politics, one which favors Russia as opposed to Turkey. The Tories believe that this war will give them a new lease of life. They point to the fact that, once engaged in a war, public opinion in England has always crushed the opposition. Even the infamous opium war, so discreditable to Great Britain, lost Cobden and Bright their seats in Parliament for opposing it. Derby and Disraeli are quite willing that the Liberals should commit themselves to the side of Russia, as they know that the traditions of the British Empire and its great interests will lie on the side of Turkey before the conflict is very far advanced.

THE GOTHENBURG SYSTEM.

Mr. Duff, British consul at Gothenburg, gives the following opinion as to the working of the licensing system in that town:—"The Gothenburg Licensing Company, or Borg, had a good object in view when established; but the system, it appears, has proved a failure owing to the way it has been carried out, and is at present only a money-making concern, realizing a large amount annually, which forms a considerable income to the town. THOUSANDS OF AFFIDAVITS.

Many having used "patent" and prepared medicines failed in finding the relief promised, are thereby prejudiced against all medicines. Is this right? Would you condemn all physicians because one failed in giving the relief promised? Some go to California in search of gold, and after working hard for months and finding none, return home and say there is no gold there. Does that prove it? Many suffering with Catarrh and pulmonary affections have used the worthless preparations that crowd the market, and in their disappointment say there is no cure for Catarrh. Does that prove it? Does it not rather prove that they have failed to employ the proper remedy? There are thousands of people in the United States who can make an affidavit that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery have effected their entire cure. Many had lost all sense of smell for months, and pieces of bone had repeatedly been removed from the nasal cavities.

CANADIAN HORSES IN ENGLAND.

Between thirty and forty Canadian horses were sold in London last Saturday. One horse fetched 180 guineas, and the average was from 30 to 45 guineas. The animal that commanded this high price was advertised to trot a mile in very good time, and was bought on this semi-warranty. No greater mistake can be made than that of sending inferior horses to the English market, which is already too well supplied with "plugs," as an instance of this, a recent consignment of 25 horses which were sent by a gentleman in the neighborhood of Toronto lately. They were at livery in Liverpool for three weeks, and a gentleman on this side had paid for their freight, when the charges for freight and livery were deducted their sale in London resulted in a loss to the Canadian exporters, this arose from the fact that the horses sent were very inferior. There is always a market here for young (four years old), sound horses, of a likely stamp, and fit for work. They may be hackneys, hunters, machinists, or cart horses, it is immaterial which, and they will sell well, but for inferior horses after deducting cost of carriage and keep in England till they recover the effect of the ocean voyage, say two to three weeks, there is a very slow sale, and there must be in all cases a certain loss.

On Wednesday eighty-one Canadian oxen were landed at Liverpool from the Dominion Line Steamer Mississippi. They were in splendid condition and presented a very good appearance. The Dominion Steamship Company are rapidly fitting up all their steamers for the meat and cattle trade and hope shortly to be able to bring over 300 head of cattle weekly in addition to large quantities of dead meat.

LORD DERBY'S REPLY TO GORTSCHAKOFF.

LONDON, May 7.—Lord Derby's answer to Gortschakoff's circular note is in the form of a note from Lord Derby to Lord Loftus, the British ambassador to St. Petersburg. The following is the text:—
"London, May 1st, 1877.

"I forwarded your Excellency on the 4th ult. a copy of Prince Gortschakoff's circular announcing that the Emperor had given orders to cross the frontiers of Turkey. Her Majesty's Government have received this communication with deep regret. They cannot accept the statements and conclusion with which Prince Gortschakoff has accompanied it, justifying the resolution thus taken. The protocol to which Her Majesty's Government at the instance of Russia recently became a party, required from the Sultan no fresh guarantees for the form of his Administration. With the view of enabling Russia the better to obtain from isolated action and the assumed interest taken in common by the Powers in the condition of the Christian population of Turkey, it went on to declare that the Powers would watch carefully the manner in which the promises of the Ottoman Government were carried into effect, and that should their hopes once more be disappointed they reserved the right to consider in common the means they might deem best fitted to secure the peace and well being of the Christians.

"To these declarations of the intentions of the Powers the consent of the Porte as not asked or required. The Porte no doubt has thought fit, unfortunately in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, to protest against the expressions in question as implying encroachment on its independence. But while so doing and while declaring that they cannot consider her protocol as having any binding character on Turkey the Turkish Government have again affirmed their intention of carrying into execution the reforms. Her Majesty's Government cannot therefore admit, as contended by Gortschakoff, that the answer of the Porte removed all hope of deference to the wishes and advice of Europe and all security for the application of the reforms, nor necessarily precluded the possibility of the conclusion of peace with Montenegro or of an arrangement for mutual disarmament. Her Majesty's Government still believe that with patience and moderation on both sides these objects might not improbably have been attained. Gortschakoff, however, asserts that all opening is now closed for attempts at conciliation. The Emperor is resolved to undertake the task of obtaining by coercion that which he unites efforts of the powers have obtained by persuasion, and he expresses his Majesty's conviction that this step is in accordance with the sentiments and interest of Europe. It cannot be expected that her Majesty's Government should agree in this view."

Lord Derby then speaks of the requirements of the Treaty of Paris and Russia's declaration of war, and concludes thus:—"It is impossible to foresee the consequences of such an act. Her Majesty's Government would willingly have refrained from any observations with regard to it, but as Gortschakoff seems to assume in his declaration addressed to all the governments of Europe that Russia is acting in the interests of Great Britain and of the other Powers, they feel bound to state in a manner equally formal and public that the decision of the Russian Government is not one which can have their concurrence or approval."

(Signed) "DERBY."

At the next meeting of Convocation at the University of London it is intended possible to carry a resolution praying the Senate to rescind their decision in favour of the admission of women to degrees in medicine. Upwards of 200 medical men have signed a petition to the same effect to be presented to the Senate.

the traditions of the British Empire and its great interests will lie on the side of Turkey before the conflict is very far advanced.

THE GOTHENBURG SYSTEM.

Mr. Duff, British consul at Gothenburg, gives the following opinion as to the working of the licensing system in that town:—"The Gothenburg Licensing Company, or Bolez, had a good object in view when established; but the system, it appears, has proved a failure owing to the way it has been carried out, and is at present only a money-making concern, realizing a large amount annually, which forms a considerable income to the town. The drunkenness in Gothenburg is great, even among the better classes, and the lower orders consider the Company's retail shops as their privileged resorts. These shops are situated in the most frequented situations, right in the face of the laborers and seamen, and I consider this a great encouragement and temptation to drinking."

THE RUSSIAN FLEET IN THE PACIFIC.

In addition to three heavily armed steam corvettes, each manned by 200 or 250 men, there are three small but useful steam sloops, all lying together some thirty miles north of San Francisco. These Russian vessels have been in their present position for upwards of two months, and, according to the officers, were awaiting the arrival of four more corvettes. It is added that the whole squadron is meant for an attack on Vancouver's Island, as well as to prey on British shipping, in the event of an outbreak of war between England and Russia. Whether this is the case or not, it can scarcely be contended in this instance that the ships of war have been sent to San Francisco from the Amoor to protect Russian interests or to avoid the overwhelming strength of the Turkish fleet in the Mediterranean and Black Sea. Our own force on this Pacific station is notoriously weak until the arrival of the Shah; and if Russia has all along counted upon England's hostility sooner or later to her settled plan of attack in Europe and Asia, it is at least a convenient coincidence for her that probably in no other part of the world could so much damage be done to British commerce in a short time by a few smart vessels, as in the Pacific Ocean. But then there have been a good many convenient coincidences with respect to Russian policy of late.

STEAMSHIPS BY RAILWAY.

The novel enterprise of transporting large steamers across the continent has been successfully carried out within a few weeks. In October, 1876, the Occident & Oriental Steamship Company made a contract with Fletcher, Harrison & Co., of New York, for the construction of two side-wheel steam-boats, each of the following dimensions: Keel, 210 feet; beam, 32 feet; depth of hold, 10½ feet. Each was to have two boilers, one vertical beam condensing engine, with a cylinder 50 inches in diameter and 11 feet length of stroke. The hulls, machinery, and joiner-work were built and fitted together at New York, and when completed the boats were taken to pieces and shipped by rail to San Francisco, and there put together again. The entire weight of the vessels and machinery as shipped was about 800 tons. The steamers are intended to run on San Francisco Bay, one from San Francisco to Sauglitto, the other from San Francisco to San Rafael.

monary affections have used the worthless preparations that crowd the market, and in their disappointment say there is no cure for Catarrh. Does that prove it? Does it not rather prove that they have failed to employ the proper remedy? There are thousands of people in the United States who can make an affidavit that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery have effected their entire cure. Many had lost all sense of smell for months, and pieces of bone had repeatedly been removed from the nasal cavities.

CANADIAN HORSES IN ENGLAND.

Between thirty and forty Canadian horses were sold in London last Saturday. One horse fetched 180 guineas, and the average was from 50 to 45 guineas. The animal that commanded this high price was advertised to trot a mile in very good time, and was bought on this semi-warranty. No greater mistake can be made than that of sending inferior horses to the English market, which is already too well supplied with "plugs," as an instance of this, a recent consignment of 25 horses which were sent by a gentleman in the neighborhood of Toronto lately. They were at livery in Liverpool for three weeks, and a gentleman on this side had paid for their freight, when the charges for freight and livery were deducted their sale in London resulted in a loss to the Canadian exporters, this arose from the fact that the horses sent were very inferior. There is always a market here for young (four years old), sound horses, of a likely stamp, and fit for work. They may be hackneys, hunters, machinists, or cart horses, it is immaterial which, and they will sell well, but for inferior horses after deducting cost of carriage and keep in England till they recover the effect of the ocean voyage, say two to three weeks, there is a very slow sale, and, there must be in all cases a certain loss.

On Wednesday eighty-one Canadian oxen were landed at Liverpool from the Dominion Line Steamer Mississippi. They were in splendid condition and presented a very good appearance. The Dominion Steamship Company are rapidly fitting up all their steamers for the meat and cattle trade and hope shortly to be able to bring over 300 head of cattle weekly in addition to large quantities of dead meat.

FOREIGN SHIPS IN ENGLISH PORTS.

The new jurisdiction assumed over foreign ships in British ports by the amended shipping law is producing irritation among shipowners abroad. Germany is now protesting. A protest to the German Ministry sets forth the hardships which German ships labour under by being forced to suffer inspection and prohibitions in English harbours, in so far as they are there exposed to a control which is not exercised within their own country, and which has never been thought necessary by German legislation, and certainly has never been applied to foreign vessels. The English law, for instance, imposes fines running up to £100 for deckloads of timber during the winter months although such method of loading is conformable to German rules. It is therefore prayed that the authorities will take such steps as they consider best suited to protect German national rights and commercial interests in British ports.

ough our educational system is the whole, perhaps the most perfect in the world, as far as it has gone, it is by no means complete. Much has been accomplished during the thirty-three years which have elapsed since Dr. Ryerson began his work, something still remains to be done before the highest possible result is reached. Thanks to the great man who has shaped and directed our system of elementary instruction, we have been able to suggest to our neighbors some valuable lessons, and to give them some good hints, which they have not been slow to adopt and improve. There are, however, some things which we may learn from them in return. Among these things, the Americans appear to us to be in the attention given in public schools, to physical development and training. It is pleasing to know that there is a disposition among our own educators to take a leaf out of their book in this respect. The teachers' excursion to the Queen's birthday last year has, in this respect, already borne valuable fruit.

thing, perhaps, in connection with the meeting of the Teachers' Association in this town was more interesting the Calisthenic exhibition—an exhibition which was alike creditable both to teachers and their pupils. Considering the short time which has elapsed since this system of training was introduced into our Japanese schools, the degree of efficiency attained is something to be proud of; and the utility of this branch of education will be more apparent in the future than it is at present. The object aimed at is to teach the pupil to do all those movements which tend to bring all the muscles, especially those which must need development and strengthening, into play, with promptness, grace and precision. Such an aim can scarcely fail to do them good or evil, all the days of their lives.

to suspect this is a matter in which these companies, or those who are connected with their management and organization, will take a lively interest.
Gymnastics and gymnastics benefit such companies in two ways—they tend to prolong the term of human life by promoting the more symmetrical and complete development of the physical organization,
thus giving to those who are judiciously exercised in them, such complete confidence in their limbs and their senses, as to enable them to escape danger and to avoid accidents, by which they would otherwise have been overtaken. Doubtless the large sums which have been paid out by the Travellers Life and Accident Insurance Company of Hartford in this borough and throughout this country during the last few years, might have been considerably lessened if the policyholders generally had been more perfectly educated.

Pain cannot stay where it is used. It is the cheapest Medicine ever made. One dose cures common SORE Throat. One bottle has cured BRONCHITIS. Fifty cents' worth has cured an OLD STANDING COUGH. One or two bottles cures bad cases of PILES and KIDNEY TROUBLES. Six to eight applications cure any CASE of EXCORIATED NIPPLES or INFLAMED BREAST. One bottle has cured LAME BACK of years' standing. Daniel Plank, of Brookfield, Tioga County, Pa., says: "I went thirty miles for a bottle of your Oil, which effected a WONDERFUL CURE of a CROOKED LIMB, by six applications." Another who has had ASTHMA for years, says: "I have half of a 50 cent bottle left, and $100 would not buy it if I could get no more."

Rufus Robinson, of Nunda, N. Y., writes: "One small bottle of your ECLECTRIC OIL restored the voice where the persons had not spoken above a whisper in FIVE YEARS." Rev. J. Mallory, of Wyoming, N. Y., writes: "Your ECLECTRIC OIL cured me of Bronchitis in one week."

It is composed of Six of the Best Oils that are known. Is as good for internal as for external use, and is believed to be immeasurably superior to anything ever made. Will save you much suffering and many dollars of expense.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

HINTS ON TRANSPLANTING.

The art of transplanting trees, shrubs and vines is only learned by experience, close observation and a strict adherence to the laws that govern vegetable growth. Any unskilled laborer can dig up and reset a tree or a vine; but this does not insure life, health and vigor. There is a well-adjusted balance between the roots and branches of every tree or vine. Trained practical gardeners recognize this fact, and the importance in transplanting or removing carefully all the roots possible, and especially the fine, fibrous ones, such as take up and furnish the nourishment. To save enough of these roots in transplanting large-sized trees, it is necessary to know the habits of growth of trees and vines. For instance, the Scotch or white pine with their long, and fleshy roots, and comparatively few fibrous ones near the body of the tree, require more care in removing than the Norway spruce with its mass of fibrous roots clustered around and near the body. The best way in all cases is to dig a narrow trench around the body, some distance from the tree deep enough to get below the lower tier of roots. In making the circle, the flat of the spade should not be placed towards the body of the tree. The top soil on the "ball," near the body, should be removed by a digging fork or other implement that will not cut or injure the small roots. In case the trees or shrubs are to be moved only a short distance from where they are going, as much soil as will adhere to the roots may be left on with advantage.

The second important point to be observed in transplanting is not to leave the roots exposed for a moment to rays of the sun, or to a blowing dry air, which is quite as injurious to tender rootlets. If not set out at once, the roots ought to be kept damp and covered over with a cloth, or "heeled in." Trees coming from a distance, when the roots show of being left exposed, and the fibres are dry and somewhat shriveled, will be much improved by plunging them into a stream or pool of water and then heeling them in, covering the roots carefully with the moist soil, and so leaving them until ready to plant out.—Scribner for May.

HOW AND WHERE TO FEED STOCK.

In deciding where you will feed your cows on green crops, an eye should be directed to the manure heap, as this is a very important matter. The probability is, that every cow that is pastured drops ten cents worth of manure in the field daily, the most of which evaporates into the atmosphere. Now, if you can secure that amount of manure from each cow by soiling, you at once pay the expense of cutting your crops, and feeding your cows in this way, and even more than that, as twelve cows may be fed, and attended daily, by the labor of a hand half-a-day, worth generally not over 50 cents. The most comfortable way for the cows, is to put them into a yard adjoining the fence where a load of feed can be drawn alongside, and pitched directly into the racks. Once a day the manure should be gathered into a wheelbarrow and taken to the dung heap, which should be kept well covered with litter. In stormy weather the cows should be stabled, and there fed. Or they may be fed in the stable altogether, and turned out into the yard for exercise after eating their feed. In no case can a farmer make a mistake by having an acre or more fodder corn ready to cut in September and October, when the nights are long, and the cows are yarded, as they require some kind of fodder at that season of the year, unless they be kept in their pastures all the time; and then, if short, a little green corn would be beneficial to them.

REJUVENATING OLD BUTTER

It frequently happens that butter dealers and butter manufacturers have a quantity of butter which becomes rancid and unfit for sale, either through improper handling or carelessness in its manufacture. Such butter can be worked over and be made to appear fresh by the following method: In a perfectly clean water barrel, filled with water, put half a pound of alum and allow it to stand until the impurities in the water have all settled to the bottom of the barrel. Fill a large boiler half full with the alum water; heat as warm as the hand can bear—but not boiling—and then add what butter the boiler will hold conveniently. Stir it thoroughly for fifteen or twenty minutes and put the butter into a churn, add one gallon of new milk for each ten pounds of butter. Add butter coloring enough to give a rich, yellow color, and churn the whole. When the butter is gathered in the churn, add salt; wash and work it well, and it will have the taste, smell and appearance of fresh butter. It is hardly necessary to add that when butter has been worked over in this way the sooner it is sold the better. We are indebted to Mrs. B. Smith, the well known butter color manufacturer for the recipe given above.—The Practical Farmer.

SEWER GAS AND DIPHTHERIA

A case where a family, occupying the third floor of a tenement house in Brooklyn, lost five children by diphtheria has been investigated, and it was found that the soil-pipe which served the fourth floor had an opening between two upright lengths of drain-pipes in the cellar which would admit three fingers. Though this opening the sewer gas could freely ascend into the house. It was also found that by pouring water into the closet of any story the trap of the story above was emptied with a loud, gurgling noise, thus leaving the sewer gas which ascends the soil-pipe perfect freedom of escape into the floor. Any rush of water in the soil-pipe sucks down the water in the trap above it, leaving it useless. The remedy is a straight pipe from the upper end of the soil-pipe through the roof, to supply air to the pipe and carry off its gases. The question arises here: How many similar diphtheria-breeding houses are there in Brooklyn and all other cities? And will these air-pipes be joined to the soil-pipe in them all? Till this is done beware of pouring water rapidly into the closet; and after every heavy shower hill the trans from the

BENEFICIAL EFFECT OF FLANNEL

The majority of people are not aware of the beneficial effect of wearing flannel next to the body, both in cold and warm weather. Flannel is not so uncomfortable in the warm weather as prejudiced people believe. Frequently colds and constant hacking coughs have left me since adopting flannel garments. There is no need of great bulk about the waist, which condemns the wearing of flannel to those who prefer waspwaists to health, for in that case flannel can be cut as loosely fitting waists, always fastening at the back. There are scarcely any of the bad effects of sudden changes of weather felt by those who wear flannel, and mothers, especially, should endeavor to secure such for their little people in preference to all those showy outside trimmings which fashion commends.

WOOD ASHES FOR FOWLS IN JURIOUS.

A correspondent of The Massachusetts Ploughman says: "It is often specified in this recommendation that coal ashes should be applied, but I have lately seen in some of the papers the advice given to supply wood ashes for the poultry to shuffle in. I would caution all against following this advice. Wood ashes are so rich in potash that their effect on fowls, feet is exceedingly injurious. I have seen poultry with bad sores and blisters on their feet from this cause, and in one or two cases have seen birds badly lamed. Coal ashes are excellent, but wood ashes should never be furnished for the purpose above named."

Paul Morphy is still in a New Orleans insane asylum, a hopeless maniac. The attending physicians believed that his disorder was caused by the mental strain of playing long, close matches at chess. Over ten years ago he suddenly developed a repugnance to the game, the feeling amounting nearly to a mania, and he rarely afterwards played it; but the mental disturbance gradually increased, and several months ago became so bad that restraints were necessary.

A chap in Belleville wanted to poison himself because his girl married, as he thought, a rival. He went to a friend, a druggist, and said he wished to die—that he desired a full dose. He got the dose, but it wasn't poison. It was calomel, and after a few hours' agony of body and spirit his suicidal notions fled, and he rejoiced that he still lived. More than that, he learned that his girl was true to him, and now he hopes to be strong enough to be married next week.

The judges have recently held on appeal that the decision of the Sittingbourne magistrates (Eng.) "that the cutting or dubbing the combs of cocks for exhibition of birds" did not constitute an offence such as was contemplated by the Act for preventing cruelty to animals" was wrong, and having directed that the case should be remitted to the magistrates to reverse their decision, the defendants—a farmer named Manning, and a publican named Sayers—were at Sittingbourne petty sessions fined one shilling and costs.

MANHOD:

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED!!

WE have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, of this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequence may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

For the information of Christian generally, it may be briefly stated that this Institution, now in full operation, owes its origin to the liberality of a Christian gentleman, a resident of Toronto, who has invested a portion of his means in the enterprise, as a free-will offering to the Lord, with the view of scattering broadcast over our land, Tracts, Books, &c., which unfold the exalted privileges of the believers, and treat of the "LIFE OF FAITH" or Trust, and of the power and peace of HOLINESS; and Gospel and Evangelical Literature.

Special notice is called to the fact that this is

No Denominational Institution.

It is neither connected with, nor under the patronage of any particular church. All the Publications it issues will be strictly evangelical, and will meet the wants of all Christians. Largely the Books, &c., &c., will be those published by the Willard Tract Repository of Boston, under the care of the well known Dr. COLLIS.

ALL PROFITS that may be made will be devoted to the establishment of a fund for gratuitous distribution of the Tracts and Books to persons and places where they are needed as may be directed by the Committee. We beg also to say that this Fund for free distribution is open for donations to all who may desire to help in this work of God.

We ask all who may desire to promote the higher spiritual life of the churches and to hold in winning souls for Christ, to co-operate with us by circulating sound religious literature throughout the land.

References for further information may be made to the following brethren (and others who may be added, who will act as a Committee for selection and distribution.

A DREAM.
BY CHRIS TILL.

Beneath the shade of willow trees,
Close by a rippling stream,
Reposing on a grassy bank
I fall asleep and dream:
I dream of Western sunny isles,
Bespangled o'er with flowers,
Of Eastern maids and fairy queens—
Of solitary bowers.
I dream of Isabella fair,
My love, my own sweet heart;
Of lily ring in a balmy grove
To gain her hand and heart.
We paused beneath a spreading oak—
Her hand I take in mine:
"You are the only one I love,"
She answers, "I am thine."

I clasped her to my breast at once,
When lo! she disappears,
But leaves a deathly skeleton
Which laugheth at my tears.
My blood runs cold, my heart stands still
My love begins to sink—
I awake: "Heavens! where am I?"
I'm lying in the "drink."

FATE OF A BULL-FIGHTER.

A TERRIBLE SCENE AT MADRID.

The Madrid correspondent of the Sunday in the bull-ring in the presence of the royal family and of the most magnificent gathering of this season.

CATARRH!

Five Years' Sickness Cured by Four Bottles of Constitutional Catarrh Remedy.

Pain in Shoulders, Back and Lungs, and Droppings in Throat Disappear.

MR. T. J. B. HARDING,
DEAR SIR:—Being desirous that others may know something of the merits of your CONSTITUTIONAL CATARRH REMEDY, I wish to inform you what it has done for me. I am twenty-nine years old; had been out of health for about five years. I had employed three or four different doctors, and tried various medicines, without receiving any permanent benefit, but continued rather to grow worse, until last fall, when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe soreness and pain under the shoulder blades and through the shoulders, with very lame back, and a feeling in my right lung as though there was a weight bearing it down, with continual dropping in the throat and down upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I commenced taking your Catarrh Remedy, one bottle of which cured my pains and gave me an improved appetite, and after taking four bottles I was restored to health so as to be able to endure hard and continued labor, such as chopping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I attribute solely to God's blessing, to the use of your Catarrh Remedy.

A bull had knocked over in succession two picadors and disposed of their horn when a third tumble called for the assistance of the cuadrilla. The bull was large and ugly beast, with long, sharp horns, and he was in the habit of retreating to goad his fallen foes. Seeing him menace the picador lying helpless on the horse, Hermosilla, as was his duty sprang to the rescue, closely followed Frascuelo. Either would have sufficed to draw off the incensed animal, but at the sight of the daring capote the two bull fighters got too close to another, and caused in their feint a moment of pause, which enabled the bull to come at them like lightning, with lowered horns. Hermosilla managed to escape but Frascuelo was caught from behind and raised off the ground, shaken on horn, which had entered his thigh, then again gored. The others hurried up to the rescue and drew off the bull, which was on the point of agitating the wounded man. The whole scene had lasted but a few seconds, and a loud cry of horror burst from every corner of the ring. Everybody sprang to the feet, from King Alfonso in the royal box to the lowest rabble down near the barriers. Shrieks of anguish burst from women, while others covered their faces with their hands or fans. Men of every rank and age could not refrain from using expressions of dismay and compassion, which were again renewed with the wretched sufferer, after rising to his feet, staggered a few steps and fell down pale and covered with blood, which streamed over his brilliant costume. The guard and soldiers had much trouble keeping the people from rushing into the ring and going from the galleries toward the door at which the wounded man had been carried out by the attendants. The confusion lasted some time; and one cared much for the bull or his tormentors, who went on relentlessly, sternly in their brutal struggle. The sole preoccupation of all was Frascuelo, and people awaiting with anxious verdict of the doctors.

King Alfonso, the Princess of Austria and the Austrian Princes were removed at this horrible catastrophe, much so that the Archduchess nearly fainted and had to depart. The King sent down his master of the horse to inquire into the state of the fallen bull fighter. He had been carried to a temporary hospital, which is in the corner part of the ring, close to the stable and to the charnel-house where horses and bulls are dragged out on each corrida. There, in a small room not very well lighted up, are several band-aids and medicine chest with the surgical instruments necessary for any emergency. There also are always waiting a doctor

The only sole preoccupation of all was Frasuelo, and people awaiting with anxiety the verdict of the doctors.

King Alfonso, the Princess of Austria and the Austrian Princes were much moved at this horrible catastrophe—much so that the Archduchess nearly fainted and had to depart. The King sent down his master of the horse to inquire into the state of the fallen bull fighter. He had been carried to the temporary hospital, which is in the outer part of the ring, close to the stable and to the charnel-house where the horses and bulls are dragged out after each corrida. There, in a small room not very well lighted up, are several beds and a medicine chest with the surgical instruments necessary for any emergency. There also are always waiting a doctor and a priest. Close by there is a small altar, with candeliers and a crucifix upon which the dying bull-fighter can cast his last glance as the minister of his faith pronounces absolution and pardon over the sufferer. Frasuelo was conducted, or rather carried, thither, and several medical men gathered around him. They at once pronounced the wounds—three in number—to be very serious, the first had penetrated eight inches into the thigh and two inches into the peritoneal region. The loss of blood was great, and the doctors advised that the patient should be taken home at once or a letter. The news was carried out into the ring, and the people felt relief at the idea that Frasuelo was not dead. Spectators went out to see him as he was borne away by four of his friends and followed by hundreds of sympathizers. Stretched out at full length on the litter, the unfortunate tortoise looked pale and ghastly, but quite composed and begged to have few cigarettes, which he smoked all the way home. The melancholy procession went along the road to the modest house in Calle Jacometrezo, where the wife and children, and mother also, of the bull fighter were anxiously expecting his return. Friends had hastened on in front to warn them, and who can fancy the agony of anguish and pain of those miserable relatives when the litter was borne up the narrow stairs not without trouble. Eye-witness told me that when Frasuelo was laid down in his bedroom before he could be removed to his bed from the litter, the poor wife sprang up and clasped her arms round the wounded man, while his poor little children had to be taken away. The medical men ordered him to be left alone and in perfect quiet, so much so that none but his family were allowed in to his room. The character of the wounds, and the fact of injuries from the horns of bulls invariably leading in such cases to gangrene, make most people

FATE OF A BULL-FIGHTER.
A TERRIBLE SCENE AT MADRID.
The Madrid correspondent of the London Standard writes under date of April 18th:—"A horrible scene took place on Sunday in the bull-ring in the presence of the royal family and of the most numerous gathering of this season. King Alfonso had asked the archduke Reginer of Austria to be present with the Archduchess at the national game in the Plaza de Toros. His Majesty, with the Austrian Prince, drove straight to the ring, accompanied by the Duke of Sesto, Count Morphy, and other members of the royal household. The Princess of Austria, after taking the Archduchess to the popular concert early in the afternoon, also drove out to join the king in an open carriage, with postillicons and outriders, a la Daumont.
Frasuelo is one of the youngest men in his profession. Born in 1844, he had displayed from boyhood great daring and uncommon agility in pursuit of his dangerous calling.
In personal appearance he was a handsomely and strong built man, above middle height. In his magnificent costume closely fitting, to display the graceful limbs and powerful sinews of this modern gladiator, Frascuelo excited admiration, and fault only could be found in the low forehead and dull eyes of the bull fighter. On Sunday it was his lot to kill the first bull, and he accomplished this work not very creditably, but his admirers, nevertheless, cheered him, then, according to the rules of the ring, he ought to have remained inactive until his turn came, and again, if an extraordinary rescue was to be attempted, it was the duty of the next espada to dash out, cloak in hand, when ever a picador was exposed to the bull. Frascuelo, however, never could resist the temptation of courting frantic applause for some daring feat of agility, and thus it was that he met his fate.
A bull had knocked over in succession two picadors and disposed of their horses when a third tumble called for the assistance of the cuadrilla. The bull was a large and ugly beast, with long, sharp horns, and he was in the habit of returning to goad his fallen foes. Seeing him menace the picador lying helpless under the horse, Hermosilla, as was his duty, sprang to the rescue, closely followed by think the result will be fatal. Frascuelo has the best advice in Madrid, and it is curious to observe the mark of sympathy lavished on him. It will hardly seem credible, but among those who went to inquire after his condition I saw the Chamberlain, in the names written down on a book for that purpose were one-third of the grandes of Spain. Generals, Ambassadors, Deputies, Governors, artists, writers, and many ladies of rank. Telegrams have poured in by dozens from the provinces, and from celebrated bull-fighters, his former rivals. The house is literally besieged by people of all ranks, whom the Police are obliged to ask to move on and not obstruct the traffic, as carriages are driving up every moment to set down the more distinguished sympathizers. Eight hundred people called and left their names before midnight on the day of the accident and nearly 4,000 have already enrolled their signatures in the list. It is no exaggeration to say that Frascuelo enjoys more attention now in Madrid than the telegrams from the East. Such being, in respects to bull-fights, the tendency of opinion in Spain, it is hardly possible that those who criticise the barbarous amusement would be granted a hearing. The Epoca, chief among Conservative papers, remarks upon the sad effects of this cruel pastime, but it comes to the conclusion that at present legislation could no more reform it than the wise Charles III. did by his edicts in last century. Directly after his death the bull-fight mania grew to the zenith of its popularity and splendor in Spain. This lamentable accident has only been an occasion to display the deep-rooted sympathies of every class of society for the Plaza de Toros, and many Spaniards tell me that the ring is sure this season to be more crowded than ever"

ODESSA.
One of the first points of attack by the turks will probably be the port of Odessa. Odessa is one of the great grain depots of Europe; the chief port of the Black Sea, and the third commercial city of Russia. It is very old, and was settled by a colony of Tartars. The original fortifications were built by the Turks and reduced in 1789 by the Russians, who subsequently erected the principal fort which protects the harbour. The erection of the town as it now stands, with its wide, and, for Russia, clean streets, its terraces and boulevards, its schools, handsome public buildings and commodious quays, is due to French talent and enterprise, the foundations having been laid by the Duc de Richelieu, whom the revolution drove out of France, and whose services were promptly accepted by Russia. The city is on a bay which forms a natural harbour capable of accommodating 200 ships, the water being so deep, even close to the shore, that the largest vessels of war can anchor at the wharves. Odessa contains over 500 granaries, which are kept constantly full by steamboat lines to the Danube, the Dniester and the Dnieper, and by rail connection through the richest wheat section of Russia. A large annual consignment is brought by rail from Moscow and St. Petersburg. Nearly four-fifths of export trade is in wheat, which amounts to

DON'T CROWD.
Don't crowd, the world is large enough
For you as well as me;
The doors of all are open wide--
The realm of thought is free,
In all earth's places you are right
To chase the best you can--
Provided that you do not try
To crowd some other man.
Don't crowd the good from out your heart
By fostering all that's bad,
But give to every virtue room--
The best that may be had;
To each day's record such a one
That you might well be proud;
Give each his right--give each his room,
And never try to crowd. CHAS. DICKENS

The Madrid correspondent of the London Standard writes under date of April 18th:—"A horrible scene took place on Sunday in the bull-ring in the presence of the royal family and of the most numerous gathering of this season. King Alfonso had asked the archduke Reginer of Austria to be present with the Archduchess at the national game in the Plaza de Toros. His Majesty, with the Austrian Prince, drove straight to the ring, accompanied by the Duke of Sesto, Count Morphy, and other members of the royal household. The Princess of Anstria, after taking the Archduchess to the popular concert early in the afternoon, also drove out to join the king in an open carriage, with postillions and outriders, a la Daumont.

Frasuelo is one of the youngest men in his profession. Born in 1844, he had displayed from boyhood great daring and uncommon agility in pursuit of his dangerous calling.

In personal appearance he was a handsomely and strong built man, above middle height. In his magnificent costume closely fitting, to display the graceful limbs and powerful sinews of this modern gladiator, Frasuelo excited admiration, and fault only could be found in the low forehead and dull eyes of the bull fighter. On Sunday it was his lot to kill the first bull, and he accomplished this work not very creditably, but his admirers, nevertheless, cheered him, then, according to the rules of the ring, he ought to have remained inactive until his turn came, and again, if an extraordinary rescue was to be attempted, it was the duty of the next espada to dash out, cloak in hand, when ever a picador was exposed to the bull. Frasuelo, however, never could resist the temptation of courting frantic applause for some daring feat of agility, and thus it was that he met his fate.

A bull had knocked over in succession two picadors and disposed of their horses when a third tumble called for the assistance of the cuadrilla. The bull was a large and ugly beast, with long, sharp horns, and he was in the habit of returning to goad his fallen foes. Seeing him menace the picador lying helpless under the horse, Hermosilla, as was his duty, sprang to the rescue, closely followed by Frasuelo. Either would have sufficed to draw off the incensed animal, made rabid at the sight of the elavng capas. The two bull fighters got too close to one another, and caused in their feint a moment of pause, which enabled the bull to come at them like lightning, with head lowered. Hermosilla managed to escape but Frasuelo was caught from behind and raised off the ground, shaken on the horn, which had entered his thigh, and then again gored. The others hurried to the rescue and drew off the bull, which was on the point of again goring the wounded man. The whole scene had lasted but a few seconds, and a loud cry of horror burst from every part of the ring. Everybody sprang to their feet, from King Alfonso in the royal box to the lowest rabble down near the barriers. Shrieks of anguish burst from the women, while others covered their faces with their hands or fans. Men of every rank and age could not refrain from uttering expressions of dislay and consternation, which were again renewed when the wretched sufferer, after rising to his feet, staggered a few steps and fell down, pale and covered with blood, which streamed over his brilliant costume. The guard and soldiers had much trouble in keeping the people from rushing into the ring and going from the galleries toward the door at which the wounded man had been carried out by the attendants. The confusion lasted some time; and no one cared much for the bull or his tormentors, who went on relentlessly and sternly in their brutal struggle. The one and sole preoccupation of all was Frasuelo, and people awaited with anxiety the verdict of the doctors.

King Alfonso, the Princess of Anstria, and the Austrian Princes were much moved at this horrible catastrophe—so much so that the Archduchess nearly fainted and had to depart. The King sent down his master of the horse to inquire into the state of the fallen bull-telegmams from the East. Such being in respects to bull-fights, the tendency of opinion in Spain, it is hardly possible that those who criticise the barbarous amusement would be granted a hearing. The Epoca, chief among Conservative papers, remarks upon the sad effects of this cruel pastime, but it comes to the conclusion that at present legislation could no more reform it than the wise Charles III. did by his edicts in last century. Directly after his death the bull-fight mania grew to the zenith of its popularity and splendor in Spain. The city is on a bay which forms a natural harbour capable of accommodating 200 ships, the water being so deep, even close to the shore, that the largest vessels of war can anchor at the wharves. Odessa contains over 500 granaries, which are kept constantly full by steamboat lines to the Danube, the Dniester and the Dnieper, and by rail connection through the richest wheat section of Russia. A large annual consignment is brought by rail from Moscow and St. Petersburg. Nearly four-fifths of export trade is in wheat, which amounts to about $40,000,000, and is sent chiefly to Great Britain. This immense traffic, the handling of which is the sole means of existence for a large proportion of the population, will be stopped by a blockade, and Russia herself be made to feel the first hurt of the war. Whether the Turkish fleet can accomplish anything more than a blockade, remains to be seen. The city is on the edge of a high plateau. The space between the quays and the cliff is occupied by barracks, and batteries dot the shore at narrow intervals. The fort on the cliff at the southeast commands the entrance to the harbour and after it is silenced the invading vessels will float over a submarine torpedo town, which Russia for several years has been laying in the harbour as the best possible defence against a repetition of the disastrous experience of '54. The torpedoes recently sunk have rendered the harbour so dangerous that for some time special pilots have been required to guide the merchant vessels safely in and out.

THE ASHTABULA VERDICT.

The directors of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad Committee, differ from the coroner's jury and the legislative committee in their judgment of the Ashtabula bridge horror. "The cause of this accident," they say in their annual report, "is wrapped in mystery. The bridge had safely borne an enormous traffic for a period of thirteen years. The slightest suspicion that the bridge was not as safe as any in the country was never for a moment entertained by any officer of this company." Many experts, on the other hand, have declared that the bridge never was really safe. The report states that there were 159 persons upon the train, including nine children. Eighty-three were killed directly and five have died since, making 88 dead—63 were injured, and 8 were

FUNERAL FASHIONS.

Whenever a fashion starts in New York it rushes along without regard to fitness or propriety. A nobby funeral has especial regard to the hour of the day usually 11 in the morning. The seton has a great deal to do with giving character to the services. It is a common thing to give a clergymen, if he is off the right stamp, from $25 to $100 for his services. The amount of light let in the room, the pose of the coffin, the arrangement and costliness of the flowers, the casket itself with the number of coaches, attest the social rank of the departed. It is getting to be rather common for ladies to order their caskets and funeral trimmings while they are in good health. A wealthy lady in New Jersey has just done that thing. Another lady of this city purchased the material for her funeral attire, was measured by a dressmaker, had the garment made up in the latest style, fitted and tried on, as if she were going to a ball, and then carefully laid away in the drawer until the change should come.

King Alfonso, the Princess of Austria, and the Austrian Princes were much moved at this horrible catastrophe—so much so that the Archduchess nearly fainted and had to depart. The King sent down his master of the horse to inquire into the state of the fallen bullfighter. He had been carried to the temporary hospital, which is in the outer part of the ring, close to the stables and to the charnel-house where the horses and bulls are dragged out after each corrida. There, in a small room, not very well lighted up, are several beds and a medicine chest with the surgical instruments necessary for any emergency.
 There also are always waiting a doctor and a priest. Close by there is a small altar, with chandeliers and a crucifix, upon which the dying bull-fighter can cast his last glance as the minister of his faith pronounces absolution and pardon over the sufferer. Frascuelo was conducted, or rather carried, thither, and several medical men gathered around him.
 They at once pronounced the wounds—
 three in number—to be very serious, as the horn had penetrated eight inches into the thigh and two inches into the perineal region. The loss of blood was great, and the doctors advised that the patient should be taken home at once on a litter. The news was carried out into the ring, and the people felt relief at the idea that Frascuelo was not dead. Numbers went out to see him as he was borne away by four of his friends and followed by hundreds of sympathizers. Stretched out at full length on the litter, the unfortunate tortoise looked pale and ghastly, but quite composed and begged to have a few cigarettes, which he smoked all the way home. The melancholy procession went along the road to the modest house in Calle Jacometrezo, where the wife and children, and mother also, of the bullfighter were anxiously expecting his return. Friends had hastened on in front to warn them, and who can fancy the agony of anguish and pain of those miserable relatives when the litter was borne up the narrow stairs not without trouble. Eye-witness told me that when Frascuelo was laid down in his bed room,
 before he could be removed to his bed
 from the litter, the poor wife sprang up and clasped her arms round the wounded man, while his poor little children had to be taken away.
 The medical men ordered him to be left alone and in perfect quiet, so much so that none but his family were allowed into his room. The character of the wounds, and the fact of injuries from the horns of bulls invariably leading in such cases to gangrene, make most people feel the first hurt of the war. Whether the Turkish fleet can accomplish anything more than a blockade, remains to be seen. The city is on the edge of a high plateau. The space between the quays and the cliff is occupied by barracks, and batteries dot the shore at narrow intervals. The fort on the cliff at the southeast commands the entrance to the harbour and after it is silenced the invading vessels will float over a submarine torpedo town, which Russia for several years has been laying in the harbour as the best possible defence against a repetition of the disastrous experience of '54.

 The torpedoes recently sunk have rendered the harbour so dangerous that for some time special pilots have been required to guide the merchant vessels safely in and out.

FEEDING THE DEAD.

The Chinese residents observed the festivities of feeding their dead yesterday. The cooking of the meats is done by a chosen chef de cuisine, in the Joss House. After the meat is all prepared, it is placed on large wooden trays and taken to the graveyard, laid near the tombs, and, although nothing is seen to disappear, the heathen firmly believe that the rapacious appetites of the Chinamen who live on the other side of Jordan are appeased for a year to come. After the feast yesterday the Chinamen returned home, and from the adjacent hillside a troop of Pinte Indians lit down on the cold grub like an army of locusts, and made short work of the feast. The Pintes are firm believers in the pagan practices, and are encouraging the heathen Chinese to feed their dead at shorter intervals.—

THROWING CHILDREN TO WOLVES

A curious and distressing case has recently been under the consideration of the police of Moscow. A few months ago a Russian peasant, with his wife and four children, were travelling in a sleigh along the banks of the Pruth, when they were pursued by a pack of wolves. The peasant urged on the horses as much as he could, but soon perceived the horrible fact that the wolves were fast gaining upon them. At the moment when the sleigh was surrounded by the ravening beasts, the man seized one of the children and threw it in the midst of them, and while the wolves were struggling over their prey he hastened on his horses, and gained ground. Four times the wolves came up with the fugitives, and four times the horrible sacrifice was completed.
 At last, the peasant and his wife arrived at the nearest village, leaving behind them
 the bones of their four children. In the bitterness of her despair, the mother informed against her husband; but the judges, considering that if the peasant had not resigned himself to the horrible sacrifice he would not only have lost his children, but also his wife, acquitted the prisoner.

A FUNNY MISTAKE.

There was Lady Baker, for instance.
 Her husband married her in Bulgaria,
 where she knew not a word of the strong English that is his native tongue. She was a finely educated girl, nevertheless,
 and was so ardently attached to her husband that she commenced at once to learn this language. Immediately after the marriage she went with him upon those African exploring expeditions which have made them both famous. She never saw England till she had been married some years, and not until accounts of her hair-breadth escapes by field and flood had had set elegant circles in London on the qui vive to behold her, the brave, gentle woman. Her first appearance was at a soiree given in her honor by Lady W.— Everybody admired her graceful, delicate beauty, and wondered that so refined a woman could have borne so much.
 Somebody said to her:

"Did you ever suffer greatly from thirst in the course of your adventures?
 Lady B. had learned English, you must remember, exclusively from her bluff husband. Therefore she replied: "Sometimes my thirst has been so great that I could see nothing but silver streams threading green fields, could hear nothing but the gurgle of cool water over mossy

STONEWALL JACKSON.

"Stonewall" Jackson and his sister were orphan children, and were brought up together until he went to West Point.
 Like most orphan children, they were unusually attached to each other. She married and settled in Beverly, West Virginia, where her husband carried on a large farm or plantation. Her brother, the General, frequently visited her, and during these visits he would invariably go to the quarters of the slaves for the purpose of exhorting them on the subject of religion. Frequently the soldier would be seen on his knees in the midst of the children of Africa, offering earnest prayers for their salvation. When the war broke out the brother espoused the cause of the South and became the greatest of all Confederate Generals, with a world-wide reputation for consummate military ability, and laid down his life on the bloody field of Chancellorsville. The sister, in spite of the opposition of her brother, uninfluenced by his brilliant achievement, and the opposition of her husband and her relatives, sided with the cause of the Union and remained true to that cause to the end of the war. So great was the feeling engendered against her that she eventually separated from her husband and moved to Springfield, Ohio, and resided with a daughter who had married a Union officer.

DON'T CROWD.

Don't crowd, the world is large enough
For you as well as me;
The doors of all are open wide—
The realm of thought is free,
In all earth's places you are right
To chase the best you can—
Provided that you do not try
To crowd some other man.

Don't crowd the good from out your heart
By fostering all that's bad;
But give to every virtue room—
The best that may be had;
To each day's record such a one
That you might well be proud;
Give each his right—give each his room,
And never try to crowd. CHAS. DICKENS.

FASHION GOSSIP.

We are glad to note, says the Echo, that the coming season will allow a little more freedom to ladies in the matter of their dress skirts; and, though they may not be much, if any, wider, they will not be tied back so tightly as before. We are thankful for small mercies. As to colors, there is decidedly some advance. We are to see pale blues, faded greens, greys, a pale cream pink—named rose creme, resembling the lining of a shell—some "lovely" mauves, and yellows in every degree of shade. Now, black "goes well" with yellow; and as it is likely that yellow will be the prevailing color this season, the dealers in jet ornaments may prepare themselves for doing a brisk business. As to the faded greens young and pretty ladies might adopt them as a contrast to their being anything but faded themselves. Fashion during the coming season, it is said, will have a decided inclination towards Louis XV. style. The once popular fabric, muslin, will come into use again; flounces will be "all the go," and lace mittens allowed to be worn at theatres and dinners though not at balls at present, and tabooed altogether for out-door wear. An immense quantity of embroidery, besides fringes and laces, will be used. So set to work, young ladies, and show us what skill you have in embroidering, with the skill we remember to have seen exhibited by other young ladies in embroidery twenty years ago! Hats for the coming season will be a bit of a swindle. Capotes, with loose crown in silk and narrow straw brims, will be largely worn; but the newest shape of hat, and the one which is likely to become most popular, is stated to be an adaptation of the hat so much in vogue only lately. It is nearly round, with a large and rather high crown and a wide flat brim, turned up on one side a la Watteau. The brim is covered with white silk, and the outside trimmed with draperies of frayed silk of damask gauze, with long trails of flowers over the crown and drooping veylet. As to jewellery, for the same reason that jet will be worn precious stones of rich hues, such, for instance, as rubies, emeralds, and car- bucles, will become favorites in the fashionable world. And a passion has sprung up for wearing rings of the date of Queen Anne; but as it is quite impossible that everyone wanting them can have rings of the date of Queen Anne, some ingenious manufacturer will, no doubt, be able to supply in the reign of Queen Victoria what was not foreseen to be required in the reign of Queen Anne.

THE TOWN 'AT GIBRALTAR.

The scenes in the lovely bay and in the narrow zigzag streets of the little town are bustling and full of life. The bay is dotted with ships and boats of many kinds, anchored in the shadow of the rock. On the quays of the town you recognize the reason of the saying that Gibraltar is an epitome of the three continents. Here, besides English and Scottish soldiers, who are met on every hand in the vicinity of the rock, are to be seen swarthy and handsome Moors from opposite Barbary, with their snow-white turbans, flowing robes, bare leather-colored legs, and loose slippers down at the heel; Jews from over the strait, in gaudy embroidered costumes, with broad var-colored sashes wound about their waists, and baggy white trousers; Spanish smugglers, in tightfitting coats and breeches, fastened down the sides with silver buttons; pretty dark-eyed women of Genoa, arrayed in scarlet cloaks and hoods, the latter trimmed with broad black velvet; Spanish beauties, with long lashes and languishing eyes, wearing their sweeping black lace veils and graceful mantillas; Highland soldiers, in plaid and tartan; and a race of acclimated English, bronzed and semi-Spanish in feature, the natives of Gibraltar, upon whom the Spanish have bestowed the rather uncomplimentary epithet of "Rock Scorpions." Out into the sea stretch the various "moles," the most conspicuous being the old and new moles, while at the northern end of the town rise the towers, battlements, and crumbling walls of the old Moorish castle—an imposing relic of the days of Moslem ascendancy. In the distance, among the hills and groves, peeps out the ancient little town of San Roque—a curious place, and well worthy a visit. Every where about as well as on the rock you are reminded of the fact that Gibraltar is, first of all, a fortress. Soldiers and guards, deploying, lounging, or on post, present themselves at every turn; high up on the cliffs the diminished figures of sentinels are seen pacing to and fro; in the pleasure gardens the most noticeable persons are the officers, strolling and taking their ease; the tattoo of drums, the roar of cannon at stated hours, the opening and closing of the great gates that separate the fortress from the town, all impress one with the military importance of the place. Still more marked appears the military character of the rock, as you glance up toward the beetling cliffs, and see, yawning from innumerable port-holes, and above long ranges of battlements, and from many an embrasure and turret, the cannon which guard the entrance to the Mediterranean; and as, curious to behold the marvels of the fortress in their details, you cross the draw bridge, go under the low arched gateways, pass the parade and Alameda, ascend the irregular streets which creep in steps up the sides of the crags, leave behind the quaint old Moorish castle, and at last find yourself literally entering the rock through an iron gateway. The first glance reveals the immense labors which have been undertaken to perfect by art the defenses with which nature has endowed Gibraltar. One sees before him a series of batteries, each with its RELIGIOUS INTOLERANCE IN RUSSIA.

RUSSIAN AND TURKISH HUMANITY COMPARED

The Cologne Gazette, commenting upon the disclosures recently made respecting religious intolerance in Russia, and the unfortunate position of the Catholic Church throughout the empire, says:—
"While Russia is declaring that she undertakes the approaching war against Turkey solely for the advancement of humanity, the institutions of Russia herself suggest the question whether a half-barbaric power is justified in avowing herself the champion of morality. We shall confine ourselves only to one point, that is religious toleration; for the Turks are accused of fanatically oppressing and persecuting the Christians. Now, how far is tolerance in religious matters observed in Russia? She has, like Turkey, a state church, the Greek orthodox, which is favored by the government by all possible means. Indeed, it is expressly prohibited by law, and made a capital offense, to leave the orthodox church for any other. All children, also, offspring of mixed marriages, if one party belongs to the State church, must be brought up in the Greek orthodox faith. Surely, despotism and the very opposite of humanity cannot be carried further. We will simply point out what a condition has been created by such intolerance in the Baltic provinces, what insurmountable obstacles are met with in Russia by foreign missions, Bible societies, etc. Much-dreaded Turkey offers a pleasing contrast in all those relations. Tolerance is an inherited maxim of government in Turkey. During the many conquests made by Christian nations in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, they imposed their faith upon the conquered races with fire and sword. We need only mention Spain and America. The Sultan, however, declared directly after the conquest of Constantinople that the different Christian churches were to be left undisturbed in their belief, and to the present day the Christians of Turkey have had their own church government. All that has been required of them is that they should raise the imposed taxes. This may have been mere indolence and indifference; but the fact remains. It is also a fact that the heavy oppression of taxation in Turkey, justly complained of by the Christians, is exercised far more harshly by their own clergy than by the Turkish government. That government has, especially lately, shown itself very tolerant toward missions and Christian associations, has lent a willing hand to the foundation of the bishopric of Jerusalem, has given the site for new churches, or generously contributed, etc. We have recently seen how the American mission, which have many flourishing schools and institutions in Bulgaria, when the question of a Russian occupation of Bulgaria was first raised, applied anxiously for protection to the English Government, their own being unwilling to meddle in European affairs. They feared that there would be an end to religious tolerance as soon as the Russian flag was planted on the Danube."

FUNERAL FASHIONS.

Whenever a fashion starts in New York it rushes along without regard to fitness or propriety. A nobby funeral has especial regard to the hour of the day usually 11 in the morning. The season has a great deal to do with giving character to the services. It is a common thing to give a clergyman, if he is of the right stamp, from $25 to $100 for his services. The amount of light let in the room, the pose of the coffin, the arrangement and costliness of the flowers, the casket itself with the number of coaches, attest the social rank of the departed. It is getting to be rather common for ladies to order their caskets and funeral trimmings while they are in good health. A wealthy lady in New Jersey has just done that thing. Another lady of this city purchased the material for her funeral attire, was measured by a dressmaker, had the garment made up in the latest style, fitted and tried on, as if she were going to a ball, and then carefully laid away in the drawer until the change should come.

One sees before him a series of galleries, tunnels, and excavations, conducting apparently into a blank of Cimmerian darkness. Here, far above the beach, are dug out long tunnels at the very edge of the headlong cliff; and as you pass along them, guided by the light of torches, you observe port-holes at intervals of fifteen or twenty feet, with brass ordnance peeping out menacingly from every one. Ascending constantly, you find that there is tier after tier of these tunnels. There, if necessity should arise, the gunners might stand and pour their deadly fire upon fleet or cohort, perfectly shielded by the massive and solid rock, which no missile, however destructive, could no more than feebly indent. A DOG'S REVENGE.

A gentleman of wealth and position in London had some years ago a country-house and farm about sixty miles from the metropolis. At this country residence he kept a number of dogs, and among them a very large mastiff and a Scotch terrier; and, at the close of one of his summer residences in the country, he resolved to bring his terrier with him to London for the winter season. There being no railway to that particular part of the country, the dog travelled with the servants in a post-chariage, and on his arrival at the town-house was brought out to the stable, where a large Newfoundland was kept as a watch-dog. This latter individual looked with anything but pleasure on the arrival of the intruder

They feared that there would be an end to religious tolerance as soon as the Russians entered Bulgaria, and began to apply Russian principles also to the country. But we will leave that unnoticed for the present, for the purpose of contrasting it with the unfortunate position of the Catholic Church in Russia. We have often had to combat ultra-montane papers when they foolishly talked of a persecution, of a diocletian persecution of the Catholic Church in Germany. But there can be no doubt that a persecution, a cruel persecution of the Catholic Church has been going on for years in Russia. The reports we ourselves have received were so fearful and horrible that we laid them aside, because we thought them unauthenticated and exaggerated, and also because we especially, who had always frankly censured Russia for her blameable proceedings in the Eastern question, wished to avoid even the semblance of animosity. But now that the English Government has submitted to Parliament papers on the subject, it would have been a sin of omission on our part not to revert to it. The facts as given in these reports have such a touching eloquence that it is superfluous to add another word. If we did not know already that Russia invades Turkey for quite other purposes, the facts as stated would be sufficient to show that Russia is not impelled by zeal for humanity."

SAGACITY OF A CIRCUS HORSE.

Without depreciating modern establishments of this kind our recollections go back to Astley's Amphitheatre, near Westminster bridge, London, as it used to be 30 or 40 years ago, under the management of the late Mr. Ducrow. The feats there performed by some of the horses were exceedingly wonderful. The animals seemed to possess a degree of human intelligence. They were accomplished actors. Their powers of simulation with a view to entertain spectators went far beyond what anyone could exand Russia herself be made to feel the hurt of the war. Whether the fleet can accomplish anything more than a blockade, remains to be seen.

The city is on the edge of a high cliff. The space between the quays and the cliff is occupied by barracks, and the shore at narrow intervals.

The fort on the cliff at the south commands the entrance to the harbor and after it is silenced the invading ships will float over a submarine town, which Russia for several years has been laying in the harbor as a possible defence against a repetition of the disastrous experience of '54. Orpedoes recently sunk have rendered the harbor so dangerous that for time special pilots have been relied on to guide the merchant vessels in and out.

THE ASHTABULA VERDICT.

The directors of the Lake Shore and Western Railroad Committee, from the coroner's jury and the committee in their judgment of the Ashtabula bridge horror. "The verdict of this accident," they say in their report, "is wrapped in mystery. The bridge had safely borne an enormous load for a period of thirteen years. The lightest suspicion that the bridge was as safe as any in the country ever for a moment entertained by the officers of this company." Many exponents of the other hand, have declared the bridge never was really safe. Report states that there were 159 persons upon the train, including nine children. Eighty-three were killed and five have died since, making a total of 63 were injured, and 8 were maimed.

FEEDING THE DEAD.

Chinese residents observed the rites of feeding their dead yesterday. The cooking of the meats is done by a chef de cuisine, in the Joss house. After the meat is all prepared, placed on large wooden trays and taken to the graveyard, laid near the graves, and, although nothing is seen to eat, the heathen firmly believe that the appetites of the Chinamen live on the other side of Jordan are satisfied for a year to come. After the yesterday the Chinamen returned, and from the adjacent hillside a band of Pinte Indians lit down on the scrub like an army of locusts, and short work of the feast. The Pintes are believers in the pagan practices, and encourage the heathen Chinese to feed their dead at shorter intervals. — Cal. Sentinel April 21.

DRIVING CHILDREN TO WOLVES

A curious and distressing case has been under the consideration of the consular office of Moscow. A few months ago a Russian peasant, with his wife and children, were travelling in a sleigh along the banks of the Pruth, when they were attacked by a pack of wolves. The father urged on the horses as much as he could, but soon perceived the horrible fact that the wolves were fast gaining upon him. At the moment when he was surrounded by the ravenous pack, the man seized one of the children in his arms, and while the wolves were struggling over their prey he hastened on his horses, and escaped. Four times the wolves went up with the fugitives, and four times the horrible sacrifice was completed, the peasant and his wife arrived at the nearest village, leaving behind them the bodies of their four children. In the midst of her despair, the mother indulged against her husband; but then, considering that the peasant had resigned himself to the horrible fate he would not only have lost his wife, but also his wife, acquitted the father.

She was a finely educated girl, nevertheless, and was so ardently attached to her husband that she commenced at once to learn his language. She never saw England till she had been married some years, and not until accounts of her hairbreadth escapes by field and flood had had set elegant circles in London on the qui vive to behold her, the brave, gentle woman. Her first appearance was at a soiree given in her honor by Lady W—. Everybody admired her graceful, delicate beauty, and wondered that so refined a woman could have borne so much. Somebody said to her:

"Did you ever suffer greatly from thirst in the course of your adventures? Lady B. had learned English. You must remember, exclusively from her bluff husband. Therefore she replied: "Sometimes my thirst has been so great that I could see nothing but silver streams threading green fields, could bear nothing but the gurgle of cool water over mossy stones. I find thirst a blasted deal more unendurable in its first stages than hunger, although if I were forced to choose my death between the two, it would be a difficult thing for me to do."

STONEWALL JACKSON.

"Stonewall" Jackson and his sister were orphan children, and were brought up together until he went to West Point. Like most orphan children, they were unusually attached to each other. She married and settled in Beverly, West Virginia, where her husband carried on a large farm or plantation. Her brother, the General, frequently visited her, and during these visits he would invariably go to the quarters of the slaves for the purpose of exhorting them on the subject of religion. Frequently the soldier would be seen on his knees in the midst of the children of Africa, offering earnest prayers for their salvation. When the war broke out the brother espoused the cause of the South and became the greatest of all Confederate Generals, with a world-wide reputation for consummate military ability, and laid down his life on the bloody field of Chancellorsville. The sister, in spite of the opposition of her brother, uninfluenced by his brilliant achievements and the opposition of her husband and her relatives, sided with the cause of the Union and remained true to that cause to the end of the war. So great was the feeling engendered against her that she eventually separated from her husband and moved to Springfield, Ohio, and resided with a daughter who had married a Union officer.

A DOG'S REVENGE.

A gentleman of wealth and position in London had some years ago a country-house and farm about sixty miles from the metropolis. At this country residence he kept a number of dogs, and among them a very large mastiff and a Scotch terrier; and, at the close of one of his summer residences in the country, he resolved to bring his terrier with him to London for the winter season. There being no railway to that particular part of the country, the dog travelled with the servants in a post-carriage, and on his arrival at the town-house was brought out to the stable, where a large Newfoundland was kept as a watch-dog. This latter individual looked with anything but pleasure on the arrival of the intruder from the country, and consequently the Scotch terrier had not been very long in his new home when this canine master of the stable attacked him, and, in the language of human beings, gave him a sound thrashing. The little animal could, of course, never hope by himself to chastise his host for this inhospitable welcome, but he determined that by some agency chastisement should come. Accordingly he lay very quiet that night in a remote corner of the stable, but when morning had fully shone forth he was nowhere to be found. Search was made for him, as the phrase says, high and low, but without success, and the conclusion reluctantly arrived at was that he had been stolen. On the third morning after his disappearance, however, he again showed himself in London, but this time not alone; for, to the amazement of every one, he entered the stable attended by the big mastiff from Kent. This great brute had no sooner arrived than he flew at the Newfoundland dog, who had so badly treated his little terrier friend, and a severe contest ensued, which the little terrier himself, seated at a short distance, viewed with the utmost dignity and satisfaction. The result of the battle was that the mastiff came off the conqueror, and gave his opponent a tremendous beating. When he had quite satisfied himself as to the result, this great avenger from Kent scarcely waited to receive the recognition of his master, who had been sent for immediately on the dog's arrival, but at once marched out of the stable, to the door of which the little terrier accompanied him, and was seen no more. Some few days afterwards, however, the gentleman received a letter from his steward in the country, informing him of the sudden appearance of the terrier there, and his sudden disappearance along with the mastiff; and stating that the latter had remained away three or four days, during which they had searched in vain for him, but he had just returned home again. It then, of course, became quite clear that the little dog, finding himself unable to punish the town bully, had thought of his "big brother" in the country, had travelled over the sixty miles which had separated them in order to gain his assistance, and had recounted to him his grievance; it was plain also that the mastiff had consented to come and avenge his old friend, had travelled with him to London, and having fulfilled his promise, had returned home, leaving the little fellow free from annoyance for the future.

nameless papers when they foolishly talked of a persecution, of a diocesan persecution of the Catholic Church in Germany. But there can be no doubt that a persecution, a cruel persecution of the Catholic Church has been going on for years in Russia. The reports we ourselves have received were so fearful and horrible that we laid them aside, because we thought them unauthenticated and exaggerated, and also because we especially, who had always frankly censured Russia for her blameable proceedings in the Eastern question, wished to avoid even the semblance of animosity. But now that the English Government has submitted to Parliament papers on the subject, it would have been a sin of omission on our part not to revert to it. The facts as given in these reports have such a touching eloquence that it is superfluous to add another word. If we did not know already that Russia invades Turkey for quite other purposes, the facts as stated would be sufficient to show that Russia is not impelled by zeal for humanity."

SAGACITY OF A CIRCUS HORSE.

Without depreciating modern establishments of this kind our recollections go back to Astley's Amphitheatre, near Westminster bridge, London, as it used to be 30 or 40 years ago, under the management of the late Mr. Ducrow. The feats there performed by some of the horses were exceedingly wonderful. The animals seemed to possess a degree of human intelligence. They were accomplished actors. Their powers of simulation with a view to entertain spectators went far beyond what anyone could expect whose knowledge is confined to the ordinary class of horses. We will mention a few particulars regarding the horses at Astley's as they occur to our memory: One evening the performance represented a house on fire. All the inhabitants of the dwelling had managed to escape except a lady in an upper story. You saw her at a window throwing about her arms wildly, and screaming for help. Her appeals to the assembled crowd beneath were heart-rending. The firemen could not reach her, for the stair was seemingly in a blaze, and there was no fire escape. The spectators in the theatre were wrought up to an agony, it being but too evident that the poor lady was doomed to perish by a painful and violent death. In the midst of the commotion a horse which belonged to the lady rushed upon the stage. In its stable it heard the screams of its mistress, and hastened to do its best to save her. Without saddle or bridle it was seen to rush into the house, and climb the stair amid flames and volumes of smoke. It reached the apartment where the lady was. She mounted on its back, holding by the mane, and the horse, descending the stair, brought her safely to the ground. Prolonged shouts of applause rewarded the hazardous exploit. The whole thing was a beautiful piece of acting, evoking throughout sentiments of pleasure and admiration. Nothing but kindness and long training could have made the horse so clever in knowing what to do and do it well. The feat was the more surprising as horses usually have a dread of fire which is not easily conquered. It will be understood that the fire had been so adroitly managed as to effect no injury on the theatre and that their never had been any real danger. — Chambers' Journal.

THE WAR NEWS.

THE BATTLE OF BATUM—TURKISH VICTORY IN ASIA MINOR.

LONDON, May 14.—A Batum special of Friday says:—"About five o'clock this morning the Russian forces, largely augmented with batteries, and made a furious attack upon the heights defending Batum on the land side, which were occupied by Bashi-Bazouks. The Ottoman troops were entrenched upon the slopes and ledges of the hills, and opened a fire of cannon and musketry which literally mowed the Russians down in swathes. They fell by scores and hundreds on the plain below the Turkish positions. During their attempts to make way against this fire a body of Turkish horse and foot, taking advantage of the thick forest, broke forth upon the flank of the Russian column, and effected a great slaughter, the Muscovites being upon ground perfectly open, and having no choice but to fight or fly. In a short time the spot which was the scene of this flank movement became covered with dead and dying Russians, but the enemy quickly brought up reinforcements, and the battle was renewed with much determination for many hours. The efforts of the assailants were desperately maintained, but towards midday their artillery fire slackened, and they at length withdrew."

The victory was won by the extraordinary courage of the Bashi-Bazouks. The dead and wounded on the Russian side exceed 4,000. The engagement lasted over eight hours. The Russians lost many guns. The only Turkish officer of note killed is Khelim Bey, Major of Irregulars.

Queen blames Gladstone for encouraging Russia in hazarding a general European rupture through a war with Turkey.

A despatch from Port Said states that the English fleet is anchored in a position completely guarding the entrance to the canal there.

An attempt was made to get up an anti-Russian demonstration in Hyde Park. The crowd only numbered about 3,000, speakers included. No one of note was present, and the meeting ended in a row.

In case of emergency, arrangements are so far complete that the authorities reckon on being able, if necessary, to embark 60,000 men in ten days.

SINKING OF THE TURKISH MONITOR.

FULL PARTICULARS.

New York, May 14, 5.30 a.m.—The Herald correspondent stationed at the Russian headquarters at Jassy telegraphs, under date of yesterday, details of the sinking of the Turkish monitor by the Russian batteries before Ibrail on the River Danube. He says:—

"The entire Turkish Flotilla, consisting of heavy armed monitors and a few gunboats of the first and second class, appeared before the Town of Ibrail, and, on coming into position, began bombarding the place. The fire of the Turkish vessels was at once returned by the Russian shore batteries, and the artillery battle was soon a fierce and deadly one, and continued for some time. At length two shells were fired from a piece in one of the Russian batteries, under the direction of Commandant Samaili, at one of the monitors having two turrets and three masts, named the Lonkfgelli. The vessel fired at was at a distance of two miles from the battery, yet both of the shells struck the monitor. As they fell the vessel seemed a moment to be rising out of the water, and in less than minute after she sank. There was no explosion.

RUNNING THE RUSSIAN BATTERIES.

HOBART PASHA'S SUCCESSFUL RUN THROUGH THE BLOCKADE AT GALATZ.

The account of Hobart Pasha's defiance of the Russians on the Danube makes a thrilling story. While his vessel was lying near Rustchuk the Turkish authorities received intelligence of the arrival of the Russians at Galatz, and they were placing torpedoes in the river. Hobart Pasha was advised to leave his steamer in the Danube and return to Constantinople via Varna, but, disdainful all such counsel, he declared that he would rather blow up his ship than desert her. Night approaching, he made everything ready for running into the Black Sea in opposition to all Russian hostile intentions, getting clear fires under the boilers of his craft in order to avoid smoke from her funnel, and other arrangements. The Rethymo, he it said, is a very fast boat, capable of steaming at the rate of 15 knots an hour. When Hobart Pasha started on his daring expedition the Danube current was running swiftly, being estimated at fully five knots an hour. Upon nearing Galatz he found that heavily armed Russian batteries commanded the river, looking capable of sinking anything afloat, besides the torpedoes reported to be hidden beneath the waters. Immediately it was dark the word was passed "Lights out," and the steamer sped rapidly along. The batteries were soon reached, and the Russian lanterns, the heavy guns and soldiers in great numbers were clearly visible to those who manned the saucy Rethymo, when suddenly a rocket was sent up from the Roumanian shore to apprise the Muscovite gunners of Hobart Pasha's coming. Other rockets followed quick succession. Then the hoarse word of command was distinctly heard; bugles sounded, and the drums beat merrily, summoning the Russians to their posts. Hobart Pasha expected every moment to be blown out of the water by the fire of heavy guns he was treating so cavalierly but being determined to make efforts in some degree proportionate to the great risk he was facing, he ran his vessel close in shore—not forty metres from the batteries themselves—indeed, so near that the Russian gunners were unable to compress their pieces sufficiently fast to get a good aim. His boat went quickly by at 20 knots an hour, and soon all danger was over. When satisfied he had nothing to fear from his enemies, Hobart Pasha ordered the crew of the Rethymo, which carries one 40-pounder Armstrong gun, to throw one shell into the centre of the Russian camp, an order which was quickly obeyed—the missile bursting in the midst of the Muscovite tents. Its effects were of course unknown, but it was the first cannon shot fired upon the Danube in the Russo-Turkish war. Hobart Pasha subsequently proceeded to Constantinople, where he received a hearty welcome and enthusiastic congratulations.

Hobart Pasha reports the Russians in great force close to Galatz, making preparations apparently to cross the Danube and enter the Dobrudzha to move upon Varna. He also found that two small Russian gun-boats had been brought by rail across Roumania, and were ready for launching in the river. He has formed an opinion that the depth of water is insufficient to enable gun-boat operations against Galatz to be successfully carried out, but believes that if he were allowed to act, he could prevent any crossing of the Russians. The Muscovites fired shell and shots in considerable quantities but the daring of Hobart Pasha carried him into the Black Sea, past all dangers, with flying colors.

NAPANEE, MAY 25th, 1877.

THE LATE SESSION.

The session of the Dominion Parliament, which closed the other week, was remarkable for two things: the bitterness of the party feeling displayed, and the number and enormity of the Tory scandals unearthed. It was not to be expected that the Government would meet the Opposition leaders with very friendly feelings after the course pursued by the latter during the recess. Sir John A. Macdonald and his troupe made it their special business last summer, to organize a series of pic-nics for the special purpose of giving them the opportunity of slandering and vilifying the Government. At these gatherings, the actions of the Government were misrepresented, their characters traduced, their friends slandered, and in many instances the foulest personal abuse heaped upon them. It no doubt is beyond the power of Sir John A. Macdonald, Dr. Tupper, et hoc, to permanently injure the character of any respectable man, but still not to feel annoyed at their persistent and dastardly attacks would indicate an amount of callousness to which few but Sir John A. Macdonald can lay a claim. One of Sir John's strong points as a leader is that he has no political character to lose. No deed that he can perform can injure his reputation. It is very different with statesmen like Messrs. Blake and Mackenzie, whose private and political record are unspotted and unimpeachable; and therefore it is not surprising that they felt like dealing somewhat sharply with the men who had spent an entire summer in trying to blacken their reputations. Whilst the Government manifested that indignation which men conscious of their honesty and uprightness always show in presence of their traducers, the Opposition were bitter and violent because they cannot get office. Mr. Rymal once declared that the proverbial bear robbed of her whelps is milder personified compared with the Tory out of office, and the recent session furnished many scandalous though very striking illustrations of the truth of this statement. Under these circumstances it is not at all remarkable that there should be a little more than the Queen James's Palace for encouraging Russia in hazzarding a general European rupture through a war with Turkey.

A despatch from Port Said states that the English fleet is anchored in a position completely guarding the entrance to the canal there.

The vessel fired at was at a distance of two miles from the battery, yet both of the shells struck the monitor. As they fell the vessel seemed a moment to be rising out of the water, and in less than minute after she sank. There was no explosion, and the monitor went down so suddenly that it is believed the fatal projectiles did not strike the powder magazine, but fell into the hold, where they exploded, no doubt tearing large holes in her bottom, the water rushing in so rapidly that she sank without any warning. As soon as the catastrophe was comprehended to its fullest extent the Russians made an effort to succor their enemies. A boat was despatched from the shore to the scene of the wreck, in which was an officer of Marines named Skowlew, an aide-de camp named Ragoulai, and Lieut. Doubanoff. They were unsuccessful in finding any of the officers and crew in the water, but Lieut. Doubanoff had the honor of capturing the flag of the sunken monitor. The ill-fated vessel was under the command of Hedzet Bey, and had 200 men on board at the time she was so suddenly destroyed. Out of this number only one man was saved, and he was picked up at the distance of a mile from the other Turkish vessels. None of the Turkish commanders made any attempt to succor their comrades in distress. The sinking of the monitor was a remarkable event, sudden and supreme in its effects. At eight o'clock that evening the Grand Duke Nicholas, having been apprised of the news, at once telegraphed to His Imperial Majesty the Emperor Alexander, reciting the main facts. During the same night the Czar telegraphed to the Grand Duke, asking for the name of the commandant whence the shells were fired, and that of the artilleryist who pointed the gun. According to the rules of the Russian service, both the officer and the man are entitled to receive the Grand Cross of St. George.

The European Situation

The London World sums up a review of the situation thus:—
That Austria will move troops into Bosnia, is most probable. The line of action for England is probably marked out. There are tasks we cannot, and tasks that we can, undertake. We cannot cope with Russia in the open field; for our small contingent of forty thousand men, far from its base, would soon dwindle to a shadow. But we can defend

The Continental Press on Lord Derby's Reply to Russia.

The Russian Telegraphic Agency, announcing the delivery of Lord Derby's answer, says:—"We are assured that the Russian government will not reply to it. That would be to carry on a controversy when it is a question of making history."

The Berlin National Gazette believes Russia will not reply, because the only possible reply, would be a declaration of war.

The Paris Moniteur, the organ of the French Foreign Office, says it is certainly a most serious incident.

The Courrier de France declares it is impossible to imagine a more alarming diplomatic document. "We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that it is a perilous indication of coolness between England and Russia and Germany."

Lord Derby's reply has produced consideration surprise and sensation in Berlin. It is said to have caused serious pain and displeasure at St. Petersburg.

The Paris Temps commenting on Earl Derby's note, says:—"Such language is rarely used in communications from one friendly Power to another,

SWINDLING ENGLISH BUTCHERS.

English people often refer to "wooden nut-megs" and "sawdust ham," intending thereby to insinuate that the Yankee nation are given to tricks which a true-born Briton would hesitate to indulge in. Not long since mention was made of an incident which occurred on an English race-course. During the run a sudden rain storm came up, and while the leading horses had pulled up past the post it was discovered that he was all streaky and striped. A swindle had been attempted, but the colors used were not water-proof, and the bright bay turned out to be a speckly roan. An incident of a like nature, also tending to show the true side of the British nation, has just occurred. It seems that the carcasses of sheep supplied at Wandsworth to a large firm have for some time past been sent with their heads on, so as to insure that the mutton was southdown. The other day one of the sheep thus supplied was unfortunately caught out in the rain, and before the attending messenger could put it under cover, its painted complexion had entirely disappeared. Dunkin By-Law

ALL complaints sent by mail to the designed for contraventions of Dunkin By-Law, must be accompanied the names and addresses of the informant and the locality where the witnesses

The Opposition leaders with very friendly feelings after the course pursued by the latter during the recess. Sir John A. Macdonald and his troupe made it their special business last summer, to organize a series of pic-nics for the special purpose of giving them the opportunity of slander-ing and vilifying the Government. At these gatherings, the actions of the Government were misrepresented, their characters traduced, their friends slandered, and in many instances the foulest personal abuse heaped upon them. It no doubt is beyond the power of Sir John A. Macdonald, Dr. Tupper, et hoc, to permanently injure the character of any respectable man, but still not to feel annoyed at their persistent and dastardly attacks would indicate an amount of callousness to which few but Sir John A. Macdonald can lay a claim. One of Sir John's strong points as a leader is that he has no political character to lose. No deed that he can perform can injure his reputation. It is very different with statesmen like Messrs. Blake and Mackenzie, whose private and political record are unsuspected and unimpeachable; and therefore it is not surprising that they felt like dealing somewhat sharply with the men who had spent an entire summer in trying to blacken their reputations. Whilst the Government manifested that indignation which men conscious of their honesty and uprightness always show in presence of their traducers, the Opposition were bitter and violent because they cannot get office. Mr. Rymal once declared that the proverbial bear robbed of her whelps is mildness personified compared with the Tory out of office, and the recent session furnished many scandalous though very striking illustrations of the truth of this statement. Under these circumstances it is not at all remarkable that there should be a little more than the usual amount of temper displayed in the debates. It could not well be otherwise. The Government were determined to defend their every act—and they succeeded triumphantly—knowing as they did that every act of theirs was performed honestly and from the best motives, and their opponents came determined to misrepresent, traduce and falsify when it seemed probable that political capital could be made by such disreputable tactics. It would have said little for the Government if they had not warmly resented such political warfare. It is only given to such politicians as Sir John A. Macdonald to act the part of the Japanese who smiled blandly when caught in a gross falsehood and pleasantly observed to the man that caught him, "you are too clever for me."

The session will be long remembered for the Tory scandals brought to light. The secret service disclosures not only prove that Sir John A. Macdonald retained public money for two years after he left office and had no more right to it than any man on the street, but the dates show as clearly as indirect evidence can that large sums were taken from this fund to assist Tory candidates in their elections. We have good reason to believe that evidence will be yet forthcoming which will put this matter beyond the possibility of a doubt. Sir John ordered certain documents to be destroyed when he was about to leave office, but he may not have covered up his tracks as well as he supposed. The Northern railway revelations, too, throw a flood of light on the past history of Toryism. We know now where at least a part of the money used to come from to help such candidates as John Beverly Robinson, and we shall know more before the next election takes place. When a comparatively short and poor railway like the Northern could be bled so freely, we can well understand what drafts were made upon the more wealthy corporations. A fitting sequel to these damaging exposures was the disgusting hypocrisy of Sir John A. Macdonald, Rufus Stephenson, Grand Master Bowell, and others of that ilk, in making a savage onslaught on Mr.

despatched from the shore to the scene of the wreck, in which were an officer of Marines named Skowlow, an aide-de camp named Ragoulai, and Lieut. Doubanoff. They were unsuccessful in finding any of the officers and crew in the water, but Lieut. Doubanoff had the honor of capturing the flag of the sunken monitor. The ill-fated vessel was under the command of Hedzet Bey, and had 200 men on board at the time she was so suddenly destroyed. Out of this number only one man was saved, and he was picked up at the distance of a mile from the other Turkish vessels. None of the Turkish commanders made any attempt to succor their comrades in distress. The sinking of the monitor was a remarkable event, sudden and supreme in its effects. At eight o'clock that evening the Grand Duke Nicholas, having been apprised of the news, at once telegraphed to His Imperial Majesty the Emperor Alexander, reciting the main facts. During the same night the Czar telegraphed to the Grand Duke, asking for the name of the commandant whence the shells were fired, and that of the artilleryist who pointed the gun. According to the rules of the Russian service, both the officer and the man are entitled to receive the Grand Cross of St. George.

The London World sums up a review of the situation thus:—
That Austria will move troops into Bosnia, is most probable. The line of action for England is probably marked out. There are tasks we cannot, and tasks that we can, undertake. We cannot cope with Russia in the open field; for our small contingent of forty thousand men, far from its base, would soon dwindle to a shadow. But we can defend Constantinople if need be; we can prevent Crete falling into other hands. And we believe it will be found that no sooner will Russia have crossed the frontier than our Government will dispatch what force it can collect, not to Constantinople, but to Crete, and to the peninsula on the west of the Dardanelles; there to bide events of the day. The grounds, giving no aid to the Turk, but ready, if our interests are directly threatened, to occupy lines west of Constantinople, and hold them against all comers.

In the blackness of the situation one gleam of light shines out. We have at length learned that Prince Bismark's retirement, which it is endeavored to attribute to German politics, is due to his inability to bring the Emperor to his views regarding war with France. The Emperor, stern as he is, shrinks from the idea of so soon entering on another great war without any immediate striking provocation, and the Chancellor sees all his efforts foiled. All his plans have been in vain. While Gortschakoff has conquered the Czar, and made of him an unwilling tool, the old German Kaiser is firm and unyielding; and even the great Bismark has to give way. The influence of the Prince Imperial, and of "that Englishwoman," whom Bismark likes not, are to be traced in this. If Europe is spared the horrors of this war in the West, in which Italy would assuredly have chimed in, all the horrors of the war in the East may more easily be borne.

The voice of the British people has not yet spoken. Led away on false tracks Englishmen have been hoodwinked and deceived. With statesman-like reticence our Ministers have said no word against the Government of the Czar. But when Russia throws aside the mask, when our Government speaks out, and tells the deeds of lying and chicanery which it knows full well; when the English people learn how they have been cheated and beguiled—with one voice the nation will cry out to be revenged for the deceit, and will demand that our honor, and our interests be protected by the might of our strong right arm.

French Foreign Office, says it is certainly a most serious incident.

The Courier de France declares it is impossible to imagine a more alarming diplomatic document. "We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that it is a perilous indication of coolness between England and Russia and Germany."

Lord Derby's reply has produced consideration surprise and sensation in Berlin. It is said to have caused serious pain and displeasure at St. Petersburg.

The Paris Temps commenting on Earl Derby's note, says:—Such language is rarely used in communications from one friendly Power to another,

SWINDLING ENGLISH BUTCHERS.

English people often refer to "wooden nut-megs" and "sawdust ham," intending thereby to insinuate that the Yankee nation are given to tricks which a true-born Briton would hesitate to indulge in. Not long since mention was made of an incident which occurred on an English race-course. During the run a sudden rain storm came up, and when the leading horses had pulled up past the post it was discovered that he was all streaky and striped. A swindle had been attempted, but the colors used were not water-proof, and the bright bay turned out to be a speedy roan. An incident of a like nature, also tending to show the true side of the British nation, has just occurred. It seems that the carcasses of sheep supplied at Wandsworth to a large firm have for some time past been sent with their heads on, so as to insure that the mutton was southdown. The other day one of the sheep thus supplied was unfortunately caught out in the rain, and before the attending messenger could put it under cover, its painted complexion had entirely disappeared. A local paper, noticing the affair kindly informs us that "the head of the animal was exhibited by the medical officer to the Guardians at their last meeting, and excited profound indignation and disgust."

PROTECTION OF DRUNKARDS.

Subjoined is a blank form, which the Government Licence Inspectors desire to be put before the public for the benefit of those women and friends who have urged prohibition of giving drink to habitual drunkards:—

"To Liquor Sellers.—You are hereby forbidden, under authority of the Temperance Act of 1864, to sell or deliver; in any manner, intoxicating liquor to—who has the habit of drinking to excess. Also take notice that I will proceed as the law directs against any persons violating this prohibitory notice. Dated this—day of—, 1877."

Damages are recoverable from $20 to $500, on conviction. This notice must be served on every individual liquor seller, by one of the relatives, guardians, or protectors. This is the part of the Dunkin bill which is not permissive, but is in force over the old Province of Canada—Ontario and Quebec.

RAILROAD COMPETITION.

A few days ago a Chicago stock dealer, who ships largely to the Eastern markets tried an experiment as to which of the eastern lines would the most quickly convey his stock to market. He despatched a train each over the Grand Trunk, Canada Southern and Great Western Railroads. The result was that the Grand Trunk train beat the Great Western four hours and the Canada Southern two hours on the road to Buffalo. On one part of the run on the Grand Trunk, 126 miles were made in 3 hours, or 42 miles per hour, which shows what efforts are being made by our great national railway to hurry forward stock to market.

The town of Iquique, Peru, has been destroyed by an earthquake.

RUNNING THE RUSSIAN BATTERIES.

HOBART PASHA'S SUCCESSFUL RUN THROUGH THE BLOCKADE AT GALATZ.

The account of Hobart Pasha's defence of the Russians on the Danube is a thrilling story. While his vessel was lying near Rustchuk the Turkish authorities received intelligence of the arrival of the Russians at Galatz, and they were placing torpedoes in the river. Hobart Pasha was advised to leave his camp in the Danube and return to Constantinople via Verna, but, disdaining such counsel, he declared that he would rather blow up his ship than desert. Night approaching, he made every thing ready for running into the Black Sea in opposition to all Russian hostile intentions, getting clear fires under the keels of his craft in order to avoid smoke from her funnel, and other arrangements. The Rethym, he it said, is a very fast boat, capable of steaming at the rate of 15 knots an hour. When Hobart Pasha started on his daring expedition the Danube current was running fast, being estimated at fully five miles an hour. Upon nearing Galatz he found that heavily armed Russian batteries commanded the river, looking capable of sinking anything afloat, besides torpedoes reported to be hidden beneath the waters. Immediately it was dark word was passed "Lights out," and the steamer sped rapidly along. The Russian batteries were soon reached, and the Russian lanterns, the heavy guns and soldiers in great numbers were clearly visible to those who manned the saucy Rethym, when suddenly a rocket was fired up from the Roumanian shore to rise the Muscovite gunners of Hobart Pasha's coming. Other rockets followed in quick succession. Then the hoarse word of command was distinctly heard; bugles sounded, and the drums beat merrily, among the Russians to their posts. Hobart Pasha expected every moment to be blown out of the water by the fire of the Russian guns, but he was so cavalierly determined to make efforts in the degree proportionate to the great danger he was facing, he ran his vessel close to the shore—not forty metres from the batteries—indeed, so near that the Russian gunners were unable to compress their pieces sufficiently fast to get a good shot. His boat went quickly by at 20 miles an hour, and soon all danger was over. When satisfied he had nothing to fear from his enemies, Hobart Pasha ordered the crew of the Rethym, which carries one 40-pound Armstrong gun, to throw one shell into the centre of the Russian camp, an order which was quickly obeyed—the missile bursting in the midst of the Muscovite tents. Its effects were course unknown, but it was the first shot fired upon the Danube in the Russo-Turkish war. Hobart Pasha subsequently proceeded to Constantinople, where he received a hearty welcome and enthusiastic congratulations. Hobart Pasha reports the Russians in force close to Galatz, making preparations apparently to cross the Danube and enter the Dobrudzha to move upon Varna. He also found that two small Russian gun-boats had been brought by across Roumania, and were ready for reaching in the river. He has formed opinion that the depth of water is sufficient to enable gun-boat operations in Galatz to be successfully carried out, but believes that if he were allowed to, he could prevent any crossing of the Russians. The Muscovites fired 11 and shots in considerable quantities, the daring of Hobart Pasha carried him into the Black Sea, past all dangers, and flying colors.

WELLAND Canal Enlargement.

Notice to Contractors.

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the undersigned, and endorsed "Tenders for the Welland Canal," will be received at this office until the arrival of the Eastern and Western mails on THURSDAY, the 5th day of JULY next, for the formation of a new line of canal from Marlatt's Pond, at Thorold, to Allanburg, including the construction of a lift lock, guard lock, several culverts and piers and abutments for swing bridges, &c.

Also, the enlargement of about two miles of the canal, from the Junction downward, together with the construction of an Aqueduct over the Chippawa River, a lock between the canal and the river at Welland, piers and abutments for bridges, &c.

And, the enlargement of the canal from Ramey's Bend to Port Colborne, including the construction of a guard lock, weir, and supply race, &c.

The works will be let in sections of a length suited to circumstances and the locality. Maps of the different localities, together with plans and specifications of the works can be seen at this office on and after MONDAY, the 25th day of June next, where printed forms of tender can be obtained. A like class of information relative to the works north of Allanburg, can be seen at the resident Engineer's office, THOROLD; and for works south of Port Robinson, plans, &c., may be seen at the resident Engineer's office, WELLAND.

Contractors are requested to bear in mind that Tenders will not be considered unless made strictly in accordance with the printed forms, and—in the case of firms—except there are attached the actual signatures, the nature of the occupation and place of residence of each member of the same; and further, an accepted bank cheque or other available security for the sum of from one to five thousand dollars, according to the extent of work on the section, must accompany each Tender, which sum shall be forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the works at the rates stated in the offer submitted.

The amount required in each case will be stated on the form of Tender.

The cheque or money thus sent in will be returned to the respective contractors, who are Tenders are not accepted.

For the due fulfilment of the contract, satisfactory security will be required, by the deposit of money to the amount of five per cent on the full sum of the Contract of which the sum sent in with the Tender will be considered a part.

Ninety per cent only of the progress payments will be paid until the completion of the work.

To each Tender must be attached the actual signatures of two responsible and solvent persons, residents of the Dominion, willing to become sureties for the carrying out of these conditions as well as the due performance of the works embraced in the contract.

This Department does not, however, bind itself to accept the lowest or any Tender.

Continental Press on Lord Derby's Reply to Russia.

The Russian Telegraphic Agency, announcing the delivery of Lord Derby's reply, says:—"We are assured that the Russian government will not reply to that which would be to carry on a controversy when it is a question of making war."

The Berlin National Gazette believes a will not reply, because the only possible reply, would be a declaration of war.

The Paris Moniteur, the organ of the French Foreign Office, says it is certainly not serious incident.

The Courrier de France declares it is impossible to imagine a more alarming and menacing document. "We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that it is a perfunctory statement of coolness between England and Germany."

Lord Derby's reply has produced a sensation of surprise and sensation in London. It is said to have caused serious and displeasure at St. Petersburg.

The Paris Temps commenting on Earl's note, says:—"Such language is never used in communications from one power to another."

BACON'S EATHAN ALLEN
PEDIGREE.

Bacon's Ethan Allen was sired by Old Ethan Allen, out of Black Hawk, by Sherman, by Justice Morgan, by True Britton, an imported horse from England.

Ethan Allen's dam was by Watkins' Highlander, by Young Messenger, by imported Messenger. The dam of Watkins' Highlander was a running mare known as Native Dawson from Kentucky. Highlander was the sire of the first Kentucky hunter, Grand sire of Flora Temple, Edwin Frost and many other noted horses. The dam of Bacon's Ethan Allen was a mare of great beauty, speed and endurance, dark bay, 16 hands high, tall made and tall, she was a mother of Pathfinder, a stable stallion owned by Geo. Benedict of Oneida Co., N.Y., she was also dam to Andrew Jackson, Green Mountain Morgan and Black Hawk Jr., and Tony.

No stock in the State of New York stands higher or than this.

This horse took the 1st Premium at the National Horse Fair at Watertown for the Best Stallion; also for the best pair of Colts on Exhibition. This Stallion is one of the best bred horses in the world, and is considered by good judges to be one of the best stock horses in the State of New York. Also, 1st Premium at the Midland Central Fair, Kingston, 1876.

The following horses were sired by him:
Continental, sold for $1,500, at four year old—the present owners have refused $12,000. The Pedigree sold for $2,000. "New Ives" sold for $2,000. The Rogers' Colts, sold for $3,000. Martin's pair of 3 years old Colts sold for $1,500 and $2,000. Ward's one of them sold for $3,000. The Kellogg Colt, at 4 years, sold for $2,800. Bonner paid for "The Monitor," half-sister of Ethan Allen, $12,000. Pike's "Mare Venus" at three years old sold for $2,000, and afterwards her owner refused $25,000. Rufus White four years old, 3 heats under 2:20, half mile in 1:12. Colonel Clark's horse, sold for $1,000. The Greig Colt, Tom Allen, Aikens' Matched Colts, four and 5 years, sold last fall for $2,000. Brown of Watertown, sold his 5 year old mare for $2,000. Had her own lot over $20,000. Terry Mare, Hartford, Conn. sold for $1,000. Henry Averell, Adams, sold a 4 year old Colt for $5,000.

This Horse is half-brother to the following horses:—

Hot put, whose record is 2:22; Wm R. Whitcomb, 2:24; Fanny Allen, 2:24; Le Blonde, 2:27; Peabody, owned by Mr. Bonner, 2:18; Ripton Box, 2:28; Honest Allen, 2:30; Major Allen, 2:24; Warwick, 2:21.5; Major Allen, 2:24; Nonsuch, 2:25; Connet, 2:27; Hickory Jack, 2:20; Daniel Lambert, Billy Hart, 2:23; Fanny L., 2:24; Warwick, 2:27; Washington Irving, 2:25.

Notice to Subscribers!

A misunderstanding with some of our subscribers, has arisen in regard to the meaning conveyed by the wording of certain circulars, sent to them by Mr. T. W. Casey, late proprietor of the EXPRESS, asking for payment of arrears of subscriptions. We wish it distinctly understood, that Mr. Casey's connection with the EXPRESS, expired on the 16th day of October 1876, and all subscriptions due him, expired with that date. We hope that our subscribers will not infer from the said circulars, that we are, at this early date, pushing them for their subscriptions.

SAD DROWNING ACCIDENT.

On Sunday last, Hugh Ralston, Patrick Currie, Thomas Shea, and Robert McRossie engaged a small skiff and started for Mill Point, when about three miles on their return trip the boat upset and Robert McRossie was drowned. The full particulars are given in the following evidence before the Coroner's Jury on Tuesday forenoon. The first witness, Patrick Currie, testified as follows:—

I was acquainted with the deceased Robert McRossie about 10 years, saw him the last time about 9 o'clock Sunday evening in the water near the Big Bend, Napanee river. There were four in the boat when coming up the river. The deceased, Thos. Shea, Hugh Ralston and myself. Robert had been rowing and said he would change seats with Mr. Shea, he went to step from one seat to the other and fell out in the water backwards, on the Richmond side of the boat. We all made a grab, in doing so, leaned over the side and all went in the water. I told them to get to the boat, I brought Robert there and the others got there themselves, told them to keep up courage, hold on and we would get ashore if they kept quiet. They all having hold, I got external appearances observed on the body. I am of the opinion that the deceased came to his death by drowning.

VERDICT.

We the Coroner's Jury selected to enquire into the cause of the death of the late Robert McRossie, find:—

That the said Robert McRossie came to his death by drowning in Napanee River, on Sunday evening the 20th May inst., having fallen from a skiff while sailing in company with Hugh Ralston, Patrick Currie and Thomas Shea.

CHARLES LANE,
Foreman.

Napanee, May 22nd, 1877.

Jas. C. Huffman, Coroner; Chas. Lane, Foreman; Miles Fralick, Daniel Higley, Norman Hogle, Jno. Aylsworth, Geo. Mitchell, Jehiel Aylsworth, Jas McKay, Billiat Conger, John Abrams, Geo. B. Sills, Thos Molloy, E. T. Curlett, Alex. Grange, Jas. Ferguson, Henry Fralick, Timothy Bell, Matthew Carnell, Thomas Symington.

The deceased has been a resident of Napanee from his boyhood. He was widely known, of a retiring disposition and a favorite with all. For over seventeen years he was employed as operator and ticket agent at the Grand Trunk Railway Station in Napanee, and latterly, was with Mr. Daly, during the dredging of our harbor. Every situation being filled with credit to himself, and to the satisfaction of his employers.

A large party from Napanee after grappling the greater part of Monday, drew a seine and recovered Shea's hat, the second time, the body was brought to the surface at 6.35 on Monday evening. The watch of the deceased was found to have stopped at 9.50 which accords with the time he was last seen. Mr. McRossie was unmarried and aged 36 years. The sad accident leading his untimely end has called up universal feelings of regret.

Messrs Macfie, Sagar, and Oliver are deserving of the highest praise for their prompt action in rescuing the survivors who would otherwise, doubtless have perished ere assistance reached them.

TOWN COUNCIL.

Regular meeting, Monday May 21st. Present—Messrs. Clift, James Roe, Lane, Fralick, Carscallen and Joy. Mayor absent. Mr. James in Chair. Minutes of last meeting read and approved.

PETITIONS.

The following petitions were presented, by C. Lane, from John Clark and others, asking for improvements on Union street in West Ward, which is unfit for travel it is necessarily used by residents of that locality, as a means of access to and from Dundas to Bridge street, and requires grading and levelling to render it fit for public use. Moved by Mr. Fralick seconded by Mr. Clift, that it be referred to street committee to report.

From John Carson, stating that the Fire Brigade at their last meeting had passed a resolution authorizing him to ask council to advance $60 on their salary for 1877 for buying shirts. Moved by Mr. Joy, seconded by Mr. Carscallen that prayer be granted. Carried.

Mr. Roe presented a petition from Kate McKernick asking for fire-wood, petitioner being helpless through weak eyesight. Moved by Mr. Roe, seconded by Mr. Carscallen, and referred to poor and sanitary committee with power to act.

From Jno. C. Clark and others, for a crossing from Zina Ham's house on Donald street to opposite side, to allow residents on West side Donald street to use side-walk on East side said street. Moved by Mr. Roe, seconded by Mr. Carscallen, and referred to street committee to report at next meeting.

From A. L. Morden, saying that a public nuisance in the shape of an open sewer was located on East side of John, between Thomas and Graham streets. It was now intolerable, and had existed for three years, and if not abated the coror-poration regarding my name, let the take Hunter's advice.

The Manitoba excitement is beginning to work in the minds of our settlers, the are signs of an exodus from this locality shortly, a word or two in the EXPRESS about the route, fare &c., will be acceptable.

On the 17th, had heavy thunder with little rain here, but very heavy a little distance north. The 18th, strong with the 19th, warm and sultry especially Sunday the 20th, 21st glorious sent rain. Rain has been much needed, ga dens and crops were suffering, other place have been blessed with more rain than us. The little pests called mosquito and black flies are very annoying, the are a plague for both man and beast.

Farmers are about through, they have been longing for rain and gladly they enjoy it.

TAMWORTH.

(From our Special)

Mr. Joiner has made great repairs and improvements in the woolen factor lately. First class work, by first class hands is guaranteed, and to make it convenient for customers at a distance a conveyance travels once a week to Arden, Marlbank, and Enterprise, to get and return work safely and promptly, 2 per cent discount for cash.

Mr. Jones woolen factory has also undergone great improvements, and more are in contemplation. His machinery which has been lately added, is of the very best, and his workmanship is warranted, Mr. Jones thoroughly understands the woolen trade, and is well known throughout the country, his friends are numerous, and he has so secured their confidence, as to be sure of all the work he can attend to.

On Saturday the 19th ult., an accident occurred here which might have proved serious. Two men Mr. Mayne and Mr. Johnson, working at Mr. Fuller's new building, the scaffold gave away and they fell from the height of 14 feet among some lumber underneath, fortunately both escaped without serious injury, and are now around quite smart.

P. T. Barnum's European Plans and Purchases.

The American Register, published at Paris, France, in its issue of February 3 1877, refers as follows to Mr. Barnum's plans and purchases:

Mr. P. T. Barnum, whose renown as a showman is world-wide, a short time since sent agents to Europe to purchase novelties for his American Hippodrome, also to make arrangements for travelling through Europe with a vast collection of wild animals and curiosities of every nature. Purchases have been made for him from Herr Hagenbeck, of Hamburg, and from the Zoological Gardens of London, Berlin, and Amsterdam, an enumeration of which would take up too much space, but the importance of which cannot be too much dwelt upon. In fact, the transportation of his animals will require more room than could be given upon two steamers between deck. From Mr. James Myers, the proprietor of the Great American Circus in this city, Mr. Barnum's agents have purchased six of the magnificent Trakene stallions, which Mr. Myers at enormous cost obtained from the stud of the Crown Prince of Germany. These animals are singularly well trained, and unequalled for beauty of frame and action, and will attract great interest in the United States, where such a performance as theirs has never been witnessed. They march, trot, and gallop at the word of command; they wheel left or right with the precision of trained soldiers. A word suffices for these intelligent four-footed actors, who ance, Napanee is deemed-nano in this matter. A daily paper would be well supported and prove a paying investment if properly managed.

The Kincardine.

This steamer was towed to Mill Point on Monday, where she will be dry-docked repainted, and receive a new shaft, the old one being split. Other necessary repairs being completed she will run on her old route.

Miss McPherson's Children.

A party of children left the Haagow and Edinburgh Houses on Tuesday the 15th inst., and are expected to arrive in this country shortly and proceed to Belleville. All applications for boys and girls for adoption or otherwise to be made to Miss Bilbrough, Marchmont House, Belleville.

Our New Pastor.

The M. E. Conference at Picton closed its session on Tuesday evening last, Rev. Dr. Hartley, formerly of Buffalo N. Y., has been appointed pastor of the M. E. Church in this place, and will preach his opening sermon on Sunday morning next at 10 o'clock. The public are invited.

Postmasters are now instructed by the Department to stamp all registered letters twice on the back with their office stamp. This will prevent letters from being opened or tampered with by officials or at least they cannot be, without its being discovered at what office it was done.

Our New Hardware Store.

Since taking possession of Mr. Purdy's stock, Mr. Perry has made considerable additions in ever department, thus meeting all the wants of his customers, and to still further secure their patronage has marked every article down to the lowest living price. See his advertisement.

Caution—Ten Dollar Bills.

The Consolidated Bank of Canada commenced on the 1st of May the issue of their new bills in denominations of $4, $5, $20, $50 and $100. No tens are issued, owing to the theft of a large quantity of unsigned bills of that amount some time since, and until these are recovered it would be unwise to issue tens. Any $10 Consolidated Bank bill is therefore not genuine.

He is Coming.

By reference to an advertisement in this issue, it will be seen that the indefatigable and irrepressible Barnum, will show in Kingston on the 4th, and in Belleville on the 5th of June. We are sorry for this, as Napanee could promise him a better turn-out than any place of equal size in Canada. However, excursion trains at reduced rates will enable our citizens to visit the above places, and they should not miss the opportunity.

Dramatic & Musical.

The Wallace-Villa Troupe gave two entertainments to full houses, in the Music Hall, on Monday and Tuesday evenings. The performance included the most laughable burlesques, succeeded by dramatic performances that were seldom better rendered outside of an established theatre. The music was excellent—and the street parade of the uniformed military band, increased the numerous attractions of this popular troupe.

SAD DROWNING ACCIDENT.

On Sunday last, Hugh Ralston, Patrick Currie, Thomas Shea and Robert McKossie engaged a small skiff and started for Mill Point, when about three miles on their return trip the boat upset and Robt. McKossie was drowned. The full particulars are given in the following evidence before the Coroner's Jury on Tuesday forenoon. The first witness, Patrick Currie, testified as follows:—

I was acquainted with the deceased Robt. McKossie about 10 years, saw him the last time about 9 o'clock Sunday evening in the water near the Big Bend, Napanee river. There were four in the boat when coming up the river. The deceased, Thos. Shea, Hugh Ralston and myself. Robert had been rowing and said he would change seats with Mr. Shea, he went to step from one seat to the other and fell out in the water backwards, on the Richmond side of the boat. We all made a grab, in doing so, leaned over the side and all went in the water. I told them to get to the boat, I brought Robert there and the others got there themselves, told them to keep up courage, hold on and we would get ashore if they kept quiet. They all having held, I got to the stern and attempted to swim ashore, shoving the boat ahead. They staid pretty quiet for about half an hour, then became uneasy, the boat commenced rolling again, and we all went under water, I then got Robert around to the boat which turned again, told them to keep quiet, Shea got him on this time, he kept shifting, finally rolled off, and I never saw him after. I was at the stern, looked to see if he would come up, but did not see him.

I then got Ralston on top of the boat and kept working towards shore. Then getting hold of a crotched stick which was fast in the bottom of the river, and kept the boat quiet until assistance came from shore. When Mr. Oliver and his friends brought us ashore they returned and recovered our boat with coats and hats. We left Mill Point about half past seven and were about three and a half miles this side when the accident occurred, cannot say what was the reason the deceased did not try to help himself. I think Mr. Shea tried to help him. Ralston had all he could do to help himself.

Inquest was adjourned till 7.30 in the evening when the remaining witnesses testified.

THOMAS SHEA, sworn.—I live in Napanee, knew the deceased, saw him last alive on Sunday evening between 9 and 10 o'clock on top of the boat about 3 miles this side of Mill Point. Had been down to the Point, Ralston, Currie, the deceased and myself left here at half past three, and Mill Point at half past eight for Napanee. Landed at Unger's Island, cannot say whether engaged or Ralston got on shore after leaving island. Ralston and deceased were rowing. About one and a half miles from the island when we were capsized. Think half or three-quarters of an hour elapsed before he was drowned. Could not see any reason why he did not try to save himself.

I walked to Unger's. The others came in waggons. Have not seen deceased since.

HUGH RALSTON, sworn.—I knew the deceased about 10 or 12 years. Left Napanee between 3 and 4. At the time of the accident we were seated, deceased was rowing with the bow oar, and myself the other. I think deceased tripped when he was changing to go to the stern, and Shea was to take his place, he went out, or struck on the edge and upset the boat, he appeared to be more alarmed when Currie shouted for help and was FRANCK, Carscallen and Joy. Mayor absent. Mr. James in Chair. Minutes of last meeting read and approved.

PETITIONS.

The following petitions were presented, by C. Lane, from John Clark and others, asking for improvements on Union street in West Ward, which is unfit for travel it is necessarily used by residents of that locality, as a means of access to and from Dundas to Bridge street, and requires grading and levelling to render it fit for public use. Moved by Mr. Fralick seconded by Mr. Cliff, that it be referred to street committee to report.

From John Carson, stating that the Fire Brigade at their last meeting had passed a resolution authorizing him to ask council to advance $60 on their salary for 1877 for buying shirts. Moved by Mr. Joy, seconded by Mr. Carscallen that prayer be granted. Carried.

Mr. Roe presented a petition from Kate McKernick asking for fire-wood, petitioner being helpless through weak eyesight. Moved by Mr. Roe, seconded by Mr. Carscallen, and referred to poor and sanitary committee with power to act.

From Jno. C. Clark and others, for a crossing from Zina Ham's house on Donald street to opposite side, to allow residents on West side Donald street to use side-walk on East side said street. Moved by Mr. Roe, seconded by Mr. Carscallen, and referred to street committee to report at next meeting.

From A. L. Morden, saying that a public nuisance in the shape of an open sewer was located on East side of John, between Thomas and Graham streets. It was now intolerable, and had existed for three years, and if not abated the corporation would be indicted at the June sessions for a nuisance so dangerous to the health of citizens and so disgraceful to the management of the town. Moved by Mr. Fralick, seconded by Mr. Carscallen that the statement be referred to a committee to report. Carried.

From Wm. Huff and others, asking a reduction of poundage on cattle from 25cts to 10cts, same as in Kingston and Belleville, and to let cows run from 6 p. m., to 7 a. m., referred to next meeting.

Michael Gleason claimed damages for the alleged killing of sheep by dogs, on motion deferred till next meeting.

PROTECTION FROM INCENDIARIES.

Moved by Mr. Lane seconded by Mr. Cliff that the committee on fire and water be empowered to employ some person to watch West Ward until next meeting of council, at an expense not exceeding 50 cents per night.

COLLECTOR'S ROLL.

Moved by Mr. Lane seconded by Mr. Fralick that Geo. Mills' roll for Centre Ward, for 1875 be referred to Finance Committee to report at next meeting of Council.

FINANCE.

Moved by Mr. Roe, seconded by Mr. Carscallen, that the Mayor notify Geo. Mills, collector for Centre Ward for 1875, that this Council claims interest for the balance lying in his hands as collector, since the said sums have been collected up to date of his paying the balance due on his note to the treasurer. Carried.

THE PRINGLE CASE.

A Letter was read from Allen Pringle, stating that the council had not given a decisive answer in regard to his proposition in the Town Hall matter. He requested a decision by next meeting he cannot accept $40 the only modification I can make is to relinquish council fees, makes a final unrepudiated offer, viz.—That Council pay him one half of what he paid for the Town Hall (7.50) and all costs as between party and party that is all, exclusive of counsel fees. This latter together with the $62.50, which he proposes to throw off, aggregates about $100, and this is certainly as much as he can be expected to lose in the matter &c. Moved by Mr. Lane seconded by Mr. Roe that the matter contained in Pringle's letter be deferred, until next meeting—Carried.

P. T. Barnum's European Pilgrimage.

The American Register, published in Paris, France, in its issue of Feb 1877, refers as follows to Mr. P. T. Barnum's plans and purchases:—
Mr. P. T. Barnum, whose renown is world-wide, a short time sent agents to Europe to purchase for his American Hippodrome make arrangements for traveling Europe with a vast collection of animals and curiosities of every kind. Purchases have been made for him by Heger Hagenbeck, of Hamburg, a the Zoological Gardens of London, and Amsterdam, an enumeration which would take up too much space the importance of which cannot much dwell upon. In fact, the collection of his animals will require more room than could be given up steamers between deck. From James Myers, the proprietor of the American Circus in this city, Barnum's agents have purchased the magnificent Trakene stallions Mr. Myers at enormous cost from the stud of the Crown Prince of Germany. These animals are specially trained, and unequalled for frame and action, and will attract interest in the United States, where a performance as theirs has been witnessed. They march and gallop at the word of command, they wheel left or right with the precision of trained soldiers. A word suffices these intelligent four-footed actors go without a blunder through the most complicated figures with a dash and a charming to witness. In addition above attractions, Mr. Barnum's have also purchased trained horses from the Messrs. Sar London, and will thus have ready Barnum Hippodrome the most complete and attractive of places of amusement. Mr. Myers alone, Mr. Barnum's paid over 400,000fr.

THE FLAG OF THE PROPHET.

Now that the Sultan is reported raised the Prophet's banner, it is while to note what is this "Flag of the Prophet," around which the turbaned Faithful, are called upon to rally black, about two ells wide, and with a green tassel that had hung before of Ayeshah, the favorite wife of the Prophet, whose affection for her was so strong that he was wont to say that she would be the first of his wives to enter the gates of Paradise would be regarded by the Mohammedans most sacred relic. As the Prophet's death bed in this chamber his warriors came to take leave of him he presented them with the curtain as a banner, looking upon them as they were to remember that they were for Allah and Mahomet. After became the custom of the Caliphs they entered upon a campaign, this standard (the Samshak) borne before them. Still later it was told that the banner was to be raised when the war in which the Sultan religion, the Caliphs—engaged would be upon in behalf of the faith. deposited in Constantinople, covered with forty-two wrappings it was deposited in a chapel in the city of the Seraglio, where it is preserved by seven eunuchs with prayers. What gives this standard peculiar significance is the belief who dies in its shadow goes at the highest joys of Paradise.

Caution—Ten Dollar Bills.

The Consolidated Bank of Canada commenced on the 1st of May the issue of their new bills in denominations of $4, $5, $20, $50 and $100. No tens are issued, owing to the theft of a large quantity of unsigned bills of that amount some time since, and until these are recovered it would be unwise to issue tens. Any $10 Consolidated Bank bill is therefore not genuine.

He is Coming.

By reference to an advertisement in this issue, it will be seen that the indefatigable and irrepressible Barnum, will show in Kingston on the 4th, and in Belleville on the 5th of June. We are sorry for this, as Napanee could promise him a better turn-out than any place of equal size in Canada. However, excursion trains at reduced rates will enable our citizens to visit the above places, and they should not miss the opportunity.

Dramatic & Musical.

The Wallace-Villa Troupe gave two entertainments to full houses, in the Music Hall, on Monday and Tuesday evenings. The performance included the most laughable burlesques, succeeded by dramatic performances that were seldom better rendered outside of an established theatre. The music was excellent—and the street parade of the uniformed military band, increased the numerous attractions of this popular troupe.

Music and Sugar.

These popular performers, the Tandy Bros., assisted by Prof. Oldham, will give a concert in the Bethel C. M. Church, Hamburgh, on Monday evening the 24th inst. As much of a good thing is apt to prove tiresome, the programme will wind up with a bountiful supply of warm maple sugar—both music and sugar being furnished for the small sum of 40cts. children 25. The above performers will also give another concert on Tuesday evening, 29th inst., in the C. M. Church near Parrotta Bay. Concert to commence at 8 o'clock sharp.

Something about Newspapers.

That the Americans are a reading people is manifest by the statistics of the Newspaper Press of the country, as given in the NEWSPAPER DIRECTORY FOR 1877, just issued by S. M. PERRY & Co., the well-known Advertising Agents of New York, Boston and Philadelphia. There are reported in it the names, character (political, agricultural, religious, medical, etc.) and names of publishers of no less than 795 dailies, 79 triweeklies, 125 semi-weeklies, 6,006 weeklies, 122 semi-monthlies, 774 monthlies, 16 bi-monthlies and 60 quarterlies, published in the United States and the British American Provinces. The Directory shows the number of each of these editions which are published in each State, Territory or Province. The book contains 376 pages, and embraces an immense amount of valuable information, showing great labor and care in its collection and preparation, information having been sought from every city, town, and village where even the smallest newspaper is published. It gives all necessary facts for an advertiser to know about 8,574 separate publications, while it is also interesting and valuable for the general reader, the student of American periodical literature, and the observer of American institutions. The book is sold at the low price of $1.00 per copy. And is certainly cheap at the price to any business man who does advertising, or to any person who is interested in the extent of the Newspaper business in America.

smiling, smiling, smiling, and I never saw him after. I was at the stern, looked to see if he would come up, but did not see him.

I then got Ralston on top of the boat and kept working towards shore. Then getting hold of a crooked stick which was fast in the bottom of the river, and kept the boat quiet until assistance came from shore. When Mr. Oliver and his friends brought us ashore they returned and recovered our boat with coats and hats.

We left Mill Point about half past seven and were about three and a half miles thither when the accident occurred, cannot say what was the reason the deceased did not try to help himself. I think Mr. Shea tried to help him. Ralston had all he could do to help himself.

Inquest was adjourned till 7.30 in the evening when the remaining witnesses testified.

THOMAS SHEA, sworn. I live in Napanee, know the deceased, saw him last alive on Sunday evening between 9 and 10 o'clock on top of the boat about 3 miles this side of Mill Point. Had been down to the Point, Ralston, Currie, the deceased and myself left here at half past three, and Mill Point at half past eight for Napanee. Landed at Unger's Island, cannot say whether deceased or Ralston got on shore after leaving island. Ralston and deceased were rowing. About one and a half miles from the island when we were capsized. Think half or three-quarters of an hour elapsed before he was drowned. Could not see any reason why he did not try to save himself.

I walked to Napanee. The others came in waggons. Have not seen deceased since.

HUGH RALSTON, sworn.—I knew the deceased about 10 or 12 years. Left Napanee between 3 and 4. At the time of the accident we were seated, deceased was rowing with the bow oar, and myself the other. I think deceased tripped when he was changing to go to the stern, and Shea was to take his place, he went out, or struck on the edge and upset the boat, he appeared to be more alarmed when Currie shouted for help, and was ambitious to get on top of the boat. I was under the boat twice, think it was half or three-quarters of an hour before assistance came. Currie helped me to grasp the boat. I then missed deceased.

NELSON S. MARICLE, sworn.—I live in the Township of Richmond. Heard some person shouting for help, ran in the direction of the noise. George Sagar and I got in a fish boat, rowed out and found three men clinging to a boat, Currie, Ralston and Shea, whom we took aboard and brought ashore. We then got knots, made a light and grappled for deceased, until about 2 o'clock, and again on Monday, when we fished him up with a net. Ralston was on top of the boat, Currie and Shea holding on the sides, about 100 yards from shore. Water 8 feet deep where we found the parties. About 3 miles from Mill Point.

Geo. Sagar, corroborates the above evidence of Maricle, and thinks they were rescued about half an hour after the shouting was heard.

ALEX. OLIVER, sworn.—Live in Township of Richmond. Was near 10 o'clock when I heard shouting for help. Ran to the river, could not get my boat on account of being locked. When rescued Patrick Curry and Shea were the only ones capable of helping themselves, Ralston and Shea appeared to be very much exhausted. I was one of the party that went after the boat, it was upside-down, and was very tottish, four men would have all they could do to save themselves in such a position, think 10 minutes more would have finished them.

DR. BRISTOL, sworn.—I have examined the body of Robert McRossie, now lying dead in his father's house, in East Ward, Napanee. His face is congested with dark venous blood, as also are the hands. The nails are also blue, there is froth or mucous mixed with blood issuing from his mouth. These are all the

THE GREAT EASTERN TO BE A SHIP

The owners of the Great Eastern considering the propriety of converting that magnificent vessel into a huge refrigerating chamber for the conveyance of American meat. A recent examination has disclosed the fact that, like the British—another of Brunel's ships hull is practically in as good condition when first built, and the directors consider it would be wise to raise sufficient money to put new and improved engines and boilers into the vessel. They been empowered to prepare a rough estimate of the cost of the new machinery and in view of the fact that the vessel even now steam as fast as any of Atlantic liners, the trade in meat, is being developed not only with United States, but also with Brazil, it is to open a wide field of usefulness a trade in which the great vessel never carry only half a load.—Scie American.

Escorted by Whales.

The San Francisco Chronicle of 10th inst. says: "Capt. Rois, of the fish ship Fleur de Lis, which arrived yesterday from Ardrossan, reports a singular experience on the voyage. When off Staten Island, which lies ward from Cape Horn, the ship entered a school of whales, which seem have resolved itself into an escort attend her on the remainder of her voyage. The whales kept in close company with the ship through this long stretch thousands of miles and did not leave until she arrived off this port and passed shore, when they took their leave with a series of lively flounders and occasional spout to sure the master they were taking in pumbers to their ship. As the passage round Cape Horn through the Pacific was a good one, fair to presume that the escort was auspicious.

VERDICT.

We the Coroner's Jury selected to enquire into the cause of the death of the late Robert McRossie, find:—

That the said Robert McRossie came to his death by drowning in Napanee River, on Sunday evening the 20th May inst., having fallen from a skiff while sailing in company with Hugh Ralston, Patrick Currie and Thomas Shea.

Sills, Thos. Molloy, E. T. Curlett, Alex. Grange, Jas. Ferguson, Henry Ralick, Timothy Bell, Matthew Carnell, Thomas Symington.

The deceased has been a resident of Napanee from his boyhood. He was widely known, of a retiring disposition and a favorite with all. For over seventeen years he was employed as operator and ticket agent at the Grand Trunk Railway Station in Napanee, and latterly, was with Mr. Jaly, during the dredging of our harbor. Every situation being filled with credit to himself, and to the satisfaction of his employers.

A large party from Napanee after grappling the greater part of Monday, crew a fine and recovered Shea's hat, the second time, the body was brought to the surface at 6.35 on Monday evening. The watch of the deceased was found to have stopped at 9.50 which accords with the time he was last seen. Mr. McRossie was unmarried and aged 36 years. The sad accident leading is untimely end has called up universal feelings of regret.

Messrs. Maricle, Sagar, and Oliver are deserving of the highest praise for their prompt action in rescuing the survivors who could otherwise, doubtless have perished ere assistance reached them.

DOCTRINE regarding my name, let them take Hunter's advice.

The Manitoba excitement is beginning to work in the minds of our settlers, there are signs of an exodus from this locality shortly, a word or two in the Express about the route, fare &c., will be acceptable.

On the 17th, had heavy thunder with little rain here, but very heavy a little distance north. The 18th, strong wind, the 19th, warm and sultry especially on Sunday the 20th, 21st glorious gentle rain. Rain has been much needed, gardens and crops were suffering, other places have been blessed with more rain than us. The little pests called mosquitoes and black flies are very annoying, they are a plague for both man and beast.

Farmers are about through, they have been longing for rain and gladly they enjoy it.

Mr. Joiner has made great repairs and improvements in the woolen factory lately. First class work, by first class hands is guaranteed, and to make it convenient for customers at a distance, a conveyance travels once a week to Arden, Marlbank, and Enterprise, to get and return work safely and promptly, 20 per cent discount for cash.

Mr. Jones woolen factory has also underwent great improvements, and more are in contemplation. His machinery, which has been lately added, is of the very best, and his workmanship is warranted. Mr. Jones thoroughly understands the woolen trade, and is well known throughout the country, his friends are numerous, and he has so secured their confidence, as to be sure of all the work he can attend to.

On Saturday the 19th ult., an accident occurred here which might have proved serious. P. T. Barnum's European Plans and Purchases.

The American Register, published at Paris, France, in its issue of February 3, 1877, refers as follows to Mr. Barnum's plans and purchases:

Mr. P. T. Barnum, whose renown as a showman is world-wide, a short time since sent agents to Europe to purchase novelties for his American Hippodrome, also to make arrangements for traveling through Europe with a vast collection of wild animals and curiosities of every nature. Purchases have been made for him from Herr Hazenbueck, of Hamburg, and from the Zoological Gardens of London, Berlin, and Amsterdam, an enumeration of which would take up too much space, but the importance of which cannot be too much dwelt upon. In fact, the transportation of his animals will require more room than could be given upon two steamers between deck. From Mr. James Myers, the proprietor of the Great American Circus in this city, Mr. Barnum's agents have purchased six of the magnificent Trakene stallions, which Mr. Myers at enormous cost obtained from the stud of the Crown Prince of Germany. REV. MR. ROY.

FINDING OF THE METHODIST CHURCH COMMITTEE IN THE HERESY CASE.

MONTREAL, May 16.—The Committee of the Methodist Church appointed to investigate the charges of heresy preferred against Rev. Jas. Roy by Rev. John Borland, have presented the following judgement:—

"We find that the charge of fifth count, which we have considered first, viz., that relating to the authority of the Holy Scriptures as a rule of faith, has been sustained.

"That the charge on the first count relating to the Trinity, has been sustained.

"That the charge on the second count, relating to the Incarnation, has been sustained.

"That the charge on the third count, relating to the Atonement, has been sustained.

"On the fourth count of the charge we find, first, that the references of Mr. Roy to the subject of retribution are few and limited; second that Mr. Roy does not fully hold the teachings of Wesley regarding the basis of the sinner's condemnation; third that we gladly recognize the fact that Mr. Roy avows his decided belief in the eternity of future retribution.

"We therefore regret to be obliged to condemn the teaching promulgated by Mr. Roy in his pamphlet as rationalistic, and in some respects absolutely Unitarian and in nearly every respect Socinian in their tendencies. We regret that we find in these teachings not only a departure from the standards of faith of the Methodist Church of Canada, but also a decided antagonism to the orthodox views of all evangelical Churches, and much as we regret to be thus obliged to condemn the views of a brother whose character and ability we highly esteem we still feel bound by our obligations to truth and to the Church to render the aforesaid judgement."

At the afternoon session the Committee according to the disciplinary powers given them, after a lengthy discussion, agreed upon the suspension of Mr. Roy from the ministry of the Church until the district meeting, one dissenting.

HARD TIMES IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Those who have any doubt about the hardness of the times in San Francisco need only to watch for a few nights the appearance of the unfortunate men who are provided with lodgings in the city prison, having no other place to sleep. Many of them are a very different class from those who used to apply for lodgings two or three years ago. They are not bums who have failed to levy for that night the sum requisited for the purchase of a sleeping place, nor are they habitually "hay-bunkers" and vagrants whom wet or cold have driven to the unwelcome shelter of the lock-up. Many of them retain the remnants of a respectable appearance; the clothes they wear were once stylish and good, and they ask for a place to sleep in a manner that makes a looker-on sorry for them and even follow the trusty to get their blankets with an air of humiliation that checks even the ribaldry of the pretty thieves, who from behind their bars are accustomed to shout in the hearing of "lodger." "Give him a feather pillow!" "Clean sheets for that gentleman!" etc. The rush of two thousand men to California street on the chance of a job of work on a railroad was quite a commentary on the situation in this city; the swarms that crowd around the bulletin boards are another, and the time is past when the harbor been heard from. The misanthropic spirit which possessed this man was doubtless due to disordered digestion and a biliousness, one of the prominent symptoms of which is a morose, fault finding disposition. The tongue is heavily coated, giving rise to a bad taste, the appetite is not good, and the patient feels dull, sleepy, or dizzy, and is apt to be fretful. Unfortunately, M. Diogenes lived several centuries before Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets were invented, a few doses of which would have relieved him of his "bile," and enabled him to find scores of "honest men" without the aid of his lantern. Under their magic influence, combined with that of the Golden Medicine, to cleanse his blood, he might have been led to take a more cheerful view of life, to exchange his tub for a decent habitation, to "spruce up" in per-appearance, and at last have taken a wife to mend his clothes and his manners, both of which were in evident need of repairs, and become the happy sire of little Diogenes who would have handed down to posterity the name, not of a cynic philosopher, but of a cheerful, healthy, happy, virtuous man!!

by C. Lane, from John Clark and others, asking for improvements on Union street in West Ward, which is unfit for travel it is necessarily used by residents of that locality, as a means of access to and from Dundas to Bridge street, and requires grading and levelling to render it fit for public use. Moved by Mr. Fralick seconded by Mr. Cliff, that it be referred to street committee to report.

From John Carson, stating that the Fire Brigade at their last meeting had passed a resolution authorizing him to ask council to advance $60 on their salary for 1877 for buying shirts. Moved by Mr. Joy, seconded by Mr. Carscallen that prayer be granted. Carried.

Mr. Roe presented a petition from Kate McKernick asking for fire-wood, petitioner being helpless through weak eyesight. Moved by Mr. Roe, seconded by Mr. Carscallen, and referred to poor and sanitary committee with power to act.

From Jno. C. Clark and others, for a crossing from Zina Ham's house on Donald street to opposite side, to allow residents on West side Donald street to use side-walk on East side said street. Moved by Mr. Roe, seconded by Mr. Carscallen, and referred to street committee to report at next meeting.

From A. L. Morden, saying that a public nuisance in the shape of an open sewer was located on East side of John, between Thomas and Graham streets. It was now intolerable, and had existed for three years, and if not abated the corporation would be indicted at the June sessions for a nuisance so dangerous to the health of citizens and so disgraceful to the management of the town. Moved by Mr. Fralick, seconded by Mr. Carscallen that the statement be referred to a committee to report. Carried.

From Wm. Huff and others, asking a reduction of poundage on cattle from 25cts. to 10cts, same as in Kingston and Belleville, and to let cows run from 6 p. m., to 7 a. m., referred to next meeting.

Michael Gleason claimed damages for the alleged killing of sheep by dogs, on motion deferred till next meeting.

PROTECTION FROM INCENDIARIES.

Moved by Mr. Lane seconded by Mr. Cliff that the committee on fire and water be empowered to employ some person to watch West Ward until next meeting of council, at an expense not exceeding 50 cents per night.

COLLECTOR'S ROLL.

Moved by Mr. Lane seconded by Mr. Fralick that Geo. Mills' roll for Centre Ward, for 1875 be referred to Finance Committee to report at next meeting of Council.

FINANCE.

Moved by Mr. Roe, seconded by Mr. Carscallen, that the Mayor notify Geo. Mills, collector for Centre Ward for 1875, that this Council claims interest for the balance lying in his hands as collector, since the said sums have been collected up to date of his paying the balance due on his note to the treasurer. Carried.

THE PRINGLE CASE.

A letter was read from Allen Pringle, stating that the council had not given a decisive answer in regard to his proposition in the Town Hall matter. He requested a decision by next meeting he cannot accept $40 the only modification I can make is to relinquish council fees, makes a final unrepudiated offer, viz.—That Council pay him one half of what he paid for the Town Hall (7.50) and all costs as between party and party that is all, exclusive of counsel fees. This latter together with the $62.50, which he proposes to throw off, aggregates about $100, and this is certainly as much as he can be expected to lose in the matter &c., Moved by Mr. Lane seconded by Mr. Roe that the matter contained in Pringle's letter be deferred, until next meeting—Carried.

On motion Councillor Fralick was added to the committee on gas.

The American Register, published at Paris, France, in its issue of February 3, 1877, refers as follows to Mr. Barnum's plans and purchases:

Mr. P. T. Barnum, whose renown as a showman is world-wide, a short time since sent agents to Europe to purchase novelties for his American Hippodrome, also to make arrangements for traveling through Europe with a vast collection of wild animals and curiosities of every nature. Purchases have been made for him from Herr Hagenbeck, of Hamburg, and from the Zoological Gardens of London, Berlin, and Amsterdam, an enumeration of which would take up too much space, but the importance of which cannot be too much dwelt upon. In fact, the transportation of his animals will require more room than could be given upon two steamers between deck. From Mr. James Myers, the proprietor of the Great American Circus in this city, Mr. Barnum's agents have purchased six of the magnificent Trakene stallions, which Mr. Myers at enormous cost obtained from the stud of the Crown Prince of Germany. These animals are singularly well trained, and unequalled for beauty of frame and action, and will attract great interest in the United States, where such a performance as theirs has never been witnessed. They march, trot, and gallop at the word of command; they wheel left or right with the precision of trained soldiers. A word suffices for these intelligent four-footed actors, who go without a blunder through the most complicated figures with a dash and grace charming to witness. In addition to the above attractions, Mr. Barnum's agents have also purchased trained horses and ponies from the Messrs. Sanger, of London, and will thus have rendered the Barnum Hippodrome the most complete and attractive of places of amusement. To Mr. Myers alone, Mr. Barnum's agents paid over 400,000fr.

THE FLAG OF THE PROPHET.

Now that the Sultan is reported to have raised the Prophet's banner, it is worth while to note what is this Flag of the Prophet, around which the turbaned, "the Faithful," are called upon to rally? It is black, about two ells wide, and was originally the curtain that had hung before the door of Ayesha, the favorite wife of the Prophet, whose affection for her was so strong that he was wont to say that she would be the first of his wives to whom the gates of Paradise would be open! It is regarded by the Mohammedans as their most sacred relic. As the Prophet lay on his death bed in this chamber his chief warriors came to take leave of him, and he presented them with the curtain of the room as a banner, looking upon which they were to remember that they fought for Allah and Mahomet. Afterwards it became the custom of the Caliphs, when they entered upon a campaign, to have this standard (the Samschak Scherif) borne before them. Still later it was settled that the banner was to be raised only when the war in which the Sultans—in religion, the Caliphs—engaged was entered upon in behalf of the faith. It was deposited in Constantinople, where, covered with forty-two wrappings of silk, it was deposited in a chapel in the interior of the Seraglio, where it is perpetually guarded by seven emirs with constant prayers. What gives this standard its peculiar significance is the belief that he who dies in its shadow goes at once to the highest joys of Paradise.

HARD TIMES IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Those who have any doubt about the hardness of the times in San Francisco need only to watch for a few nights the appearance of the unfortunate men who are provided with lodgings, in the city prison, having no other place to sleep. Many of them are a very different class from those who used to apply for lodgings two or three years ago. They are not bums who have failed to levy for that night the sum requisited for the purchase of a sleeping place, nor are they habitually "hay-bunkers" and vagrants whom wet or cold have driven to the unwelcome shelter of the lock-up. Many of them retain the remnants of a respectable appearance; the clothes they wear were once stylish and good, and they ask for a place to sleep in a manner that makes a looker-on sorry for them and even follow the trusty to get their blankets with an air of humiliation that checks even the ribaldry of the pretty thieves, who from behind their bars are accustomed to shout in the hearing of "lodger," "Give him a feather pillow! Clean sheets for that gentleman!" etc. The rush of two thousand men to California street on the chance of a job of work on a railroad was quite a commentary on the situation in this city; the swarms that crowd around the bulletin boards are another, and the time is past when the beggar would decline to have a meal gratis and request the coin or nothing. These are hard times, and they are not likely to be better for a long time to come. Working men who think of coming here had therefore better stay away, and those who are here and have enough to go away had better go. From the San Francisco Mail.

THE PRESS ASSOCIATION

The annual meeting is fixed for Wednesday, August 1st, at 11 a. m., at Montreal. The annual excursion is to take place over the Intercolonial to the maritime provinces. The Association will leave Montreal on Wednesday by boat for Quebec, where cars will be taken for Shediac, whence the party will pass over to Prince Edward Island. After a day or two there, the excursion will proceed from Charlottetown to Pictou, inspecting the coal mines, then to Halifax and other points of interest in Nova Scotia, including the Londonderry Steel Works and the Annapolis Valley, the scene of Longfellow's Evangeline. Across to St. John and up the river to Fredericton, will take up a couple of days, and the party will endeavor to reach Toronto and home by the second Saturday night. The details are not yet decided upon, but the foregoing general outline has been adopted. All arrangements will be made at the earliest possible day by the Secretary, Mr. W. R. Clinne, Bowmanville, and the President, Mr. C. D. Barr, Lindsay, and duly announced. It is hoped that the attendance of members of the Association and representative press men of Ontario will be large, as the excursion presents a splendid opportunity for seeing the industries and resources of our fellow countrymen down by the sea, and making pleasant personal acquaintances.

The Seventeen-Year Locusts.

A gentleman from Newington, Conn., mentions the occurrence of a flight of beetles in the early even twilight that must have included millions. They made a loud humming or booming sound, and were the thinks about ten minutes in passing over. From other quarters we hear of their being found in large numbers emerging from the ground. A resident of the north-west part of Hartford, on the Blue Hill Road, brings in two branches of a plum tree—one all of leaves and blossoms that were broken off yesterday before sunset the other stripped nearly bare, that was broken off this morning. THE GREAT EASTERN TO BE A MEAT
SHIP

The owners of the Great Eastern are, considering the propriety of converting that magnificent vessel into a huge refrig-erating chamber for the conveyance of American meat. A recent examination has disclosed the fact that, like the Great Britain—another of Brunels ships—the hull is practically in as good condition as when first built, and the directors consider it would be wise to raise sufficient money to put new and improved engines and boilers into the vessel. They have been empowered to prepare a rough estimate of the cost of the new machinery;
and in view of the fact that the vessel can even now steam as fast as any of the Atlantic liners, the trade in meat, which is being developed not only with the United States, but also with Brazil, promises to open a wide field of usefulness
a trade in which the great vessel need never carry only half a load.—Scientific

Escorted by Whales.

The San Francisco Chronicle of the 10th inst. says: "Capt. Rois, of the British ship l'eur de Lis, which arrived yesterday from Ardrossan, reports a very singular experience on the voyage.
When off Staten Island, which lies eastward from Cape Horn, the ship encountered a school of whales, which seems to have resolved itself into an escort to attend her on the remainder of her passage. The whales kept in close company with the ship through this long stretch of thousands of miles and did not leave her until she arrived off this port and put in for shore, when they took their leave with a series of lively flounders and an occasional spout to sure the master that they were taking in pumbers to his health.
As the passage round Cape Horn and through the Pacific was a good one, it is fair to presume that the escort was auspicious.

This singular man lived in Greece. He was distinguished for his eccentricities, bad manners, and bad disposition. It was his chief business to find fault. For example, he took a lantern one day when the sun was shining brightly and went out to search for an honest man, thereby insinuating that such person were exceedingly scarce. When Alexander, a distinguished military gentleman, paid him a visit, and inquired what he could do for him, he had the impudence to tell him to "get out of his sunshine." To cap the climax of his oddities, he dressed like a beggar and lived in a tub! He was a sour, crabbed, crusty old bachelor.
We infer that he had no wife, first, because history does not mention her;
second because no woman would take kindly to one of his habits, dress, or manners, or aspire to become mistress of his mansion. "There was an old woman who lived in a shoe," it is true, but the woman who would live in a tub, and es-

The tongue is heavily coated, giving rise to a bad taste, the appetite is not good, and the patient feels dull, sleepily, or dizzy, and is apt to be fretful. Unfortunately, M. Diogenes lived several centuries before Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets were invented, a few doses of which would have relieved him of his "bile," and enabled him to find scores of "honest men" without the aid of his lantern. Under their magic influence, combined with that of the Golden Medi- Discovery, to cleanse his blood, he might have been led to take a more cheerful view of life, to exchange his tub for a decent habitation, to "spruce up" in per- appearance, and at last have taken a wife to mend his clothes and his manners, both of which were in evident need of re- pairs, and become the happy sire of little Diogeness who would have handed down to posterity the name, not of a cynic philosopher, but of a cheerful, healthy, happy, virtuous man!!

NO RISK.

Thomas' Electric Oil! Worth Ten Times its Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

Pain cannot stay where it is used. It is the cheapest Medicine ever made. One dose cures common SORE Throat, One bottle has cured BRONCHITIS. Fifty cents' worth has cured an OLD STANDING COUGH. One or two bottles cures bad cases of Piles and KIDNEY TROUBLES. Six to eight applications cure ANY CASE OF EXCORIATED NIPPLES OR INFLAMED BREAST. One bottle has cured LAME BACK of years' standing Daniel Plank, of Brookfield, Tioga County, Pa. says: "I went thirty miles for a bottle of your Oil, which effected a WONDERFUL CURE of a CROOKED LIMB, by six applications." Another who has had ASTHMA for years, says: "I have half of a 50 cent bottle left, and $100 would not buy it if I could get no more."

Rufus Robinson, of Nunda, N. Y., writes: "One small bottle of your ELECTRIC OIL restored the voice where the persons had not spoken above a whisper in FIVE YEARS." Rev. J. Mallory, of Wyoming, N. Y., writes: "Your ELECTRIC OIL cured me of Bronchitis in one week."

It is composed of Six of the BEST OILS THAT ARE KNOWN. Is as good for internal as for external use, and is believed to be immeasurably superior to anything ever made. Will save you much suffering and many dollars of expense.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS. Ask for Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. See that the signature of S. N. THOMAS is on the wrapper, and the name of Northrop and Lyman are blown in the bottle, and "Take no other." Sold by all medicine dealers. Price, 25 cts. NORTHROP & LYMAN, Toronto, Ont., Proprietors for the Dominion.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC

NARROW ROADWAYS.

In his paper on "Village improvement Associations" (Scribner for May,) Colonel Waring advocates narrow roadways. He says:

The great expense of Macadamizing or Telfordizing puts these systems out of the reach of small communities. Wherever the original expense can be borne, the subsequent cost of maintenance will be so light, and the result generally will be so satisfactory as to make it always a good investment. The circumstances under which these costly forms of construction may be adopted will be generally extended if we can overcome the prevalent American prejudice in favor of wide roads. Against wide streets there is as a rule no objection, though exceptional narrow and well shaded lanes have a charm that will always commend them to persons of taste. A wide street, that is, broad spaces between fences, by no means implies a broad roadway. All we need in the principal thoroughfare of a busy village is such a width as will allow of the easy passing of vehicles in the middle of the road, and the standing of one vehicle at rest at each side. This will be accomplished even in the business street of a village by a width of roadway of thirty feet. Under most other circumstances twenty feet of roadway will be ample. This will allow of the moving of three vehicles side by side, and will give a leeway of six feet between two vehicles passing each other. * In the island of Jersey there are many excellent roads only six feet wide. These are provided with frequent little bays or turn-outs to allow teams to pass each other. Although such extremely narrow roads are not to be recommended, the difference in comfort and economy of team power between these and the average American dirt road is enormously in their favor. The widest roads in Jersey, leading from a busy town of thirty thousand inhabitants into a thickly settled farming region, where business and pleasure travel is very active, and where excursion cars carrying thirty or forty persons are constantly passing, are only twenty feet wide; often only of this width between the hedge rows, the road itself being an excellent foot path its whole width. Nowhere else in the world is the rural charm more perfectly developed than in Jersey, and no element of its great beauty is so conspicuous and so constantly satisfactory as its narrow and embowered lanes and roadways.

WHITEWASHING

The following is a correct scientific and practical rule: Well wash the ceiling by wetting it twice with water, lying on as much as can well be floated on, then rub the old color up with a stumpy brush and wipe off with a large sponge. When this is done, stop all the cracks with whiting and plaster of Paris. When dry, clair-côle with size and a little of the white-wash. If very much stained, when this is dry, paint these parts with turps, color, and, if necessary, clair-côle again. To make the whitewash take a dozen lbs. of whiting (in large balls), break them up in a pail, and cover with water to soak. During this time melt over a slow fire 4 lbs. common size, and at the same time, with a palette knife or small trowel, rub up fine about a dessertspoonful of blue-black with water to a fine paste; then pour the water off the top of the whiting, and with a stick stir in the black; when well mixed, stir in the melted size and strain. When cold, it is fit for use. If the jelly is too stiff for use, beat it well up and add a little cold water. Commence whitewashing over the window, and so work from the light; lay off the work into that done, and not all in one direction, as in painting. Distemper color of any tint may be made by using any other color instead of the blue-black.

Commence whitewashing over the window, and so work from the light; lay off the work into that done, and not all in one direction, as in painting. Distemper color of any tint may be made by using any other color instead of the blue-black—as ochre, chrome, Dutch pink, raw sienna for yellows and buff; Venetian red, burnt sienna, Indian red, or purple brown for reds; celestial blue ultramarine indigo for blues; red and blue for purple, grey or lavender; red lead and chrome for orange; Brunswick green for greens.

DURABILITY OF SHINGLES

Farmers generally use shingles on the roofs of their buildings, and without doubt they make a good perhaps on the whole, the best, covering. Good pine shingles will last from twenty to thirty years, and the best of shayed cedar nearly as long. Sawed shingles are not nearly as durable as shayed ones. The nails seem to rust off with the sawed shingles, and the roof in a few years becomes leaky. If the shingles, whether shayed or sawed, be dipped in lime water before being laid they will last much longer. We have seen shingles laid that were first dipped in strong lime water, and when well dried were dipped into thin red paint and after the roof was covered, it was again painted. Roofs so treated will last more than enough longer to pay the additional cost. In a country where shingles are very cheap, this would not be of much consequence, but generally it would be, and we call attention to it, because the lime water and paint are within reach of all, and can be easily used.

BEARING-REINS FOR HORSES.

The British Medical Journal thus protests: Physiology protests against the strained and artificial attitude which the horse is compelled to assume, and which must certainly lessen his power of drawing weights. Humanity and common sense protests against the infliction of this constant gagging strain upon the sensitive mouth of an animal whose mouth is used by the driver as the principal means of guiding and directing him. Nor can any one who has any real knowledge of, or pleasure in the study of animal forms, feel otherwise than gratified at the free and unconstrained attitude of a horse driven without bearing-reins. No good coachman uses bearing-reins for a horse vest $1,000 at 6 per cent. for each widow of the fireman killed at the late fire, and $500 for each of the children.

A box of grasshopper's eggs sent from the States to the editor of the Seaforth Exhibitor hatched out in a drawer into which they had been put.

A hen belonging to Stephen Thomas, of Mersea, the other day laid an egg over three inches in length, the circumference of which was eight-and-a-half inches.

The Whitby Chronicle gives the following respecting the License Law:—Since 1st April, 1876, the informations laid numbered 56; convictions, 40; amount of fines, $810; collected, $645.

The detective employed by the Quebec Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals is at work among the city carters, of whom several have been fined for illtreating their horses.

The Young Men's Christian Union of Boston has consented to assume all the duties and expense of sending poor children into the country for a week's vacation during the heated term.

Potatoes are reported at $1.10 to $1.20 per bushel in Whitby and Oshawa, 80 to 90 cents in Beaverton, Cannington and Uxbridge, and 50 to 75 cents in Port Perry.

It is not expected that more than 50,000 sawlogs will reach Belleville this year. The remainder will be left in the back country, owing to the unusual lowness of the water in the streams.

There are three thousand five hundred street lamps in Islington, England, and, on an average, there are one thousand squares of glass broken in these lamps every week by street boys.

The members of the congregation of Knox Church, Elora, have begun preparation on a grand scale for the celebration of their fortieth anniversary as a congregation, which occurs on the 21st inst.

Mr. Leslie, Postmaster of Toronto, was presented by the employees on the 8th inst. with a gold watch and chain. The gifts were intended to mark Mr. Leslie's entrance on the 25th year of his incumbency of the office.

$300 was paid for a proscenium box at the Fifth Avenue Theatre on the opening night of Miss Neilson's engagement, the largest price paid since Jenny Lind's visit. Miss Neilson returns to Europe after her brief visit.

The fortification walls surrounding the city of Quebec, are falling into a very dilapidated state for want of constant attention, and repairs are required. The gun platforms are decaying, and many of the guns are dismantled.

In the House of Lords an amendment to the Burial Bill, proposed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, permitting the reading of other services than that of the Church of England in church-yards, was passed by a vote of 54 against 60, despite the opposition of the Government.

Doctor Ayer is to remain in the Boston Insane Asylum. Three guardians have been appointed. Each will give bonds in $250,000. Ayer's fortune is estimated at $15,000,000. He first showed symptoms of insanity a year ago, caused by business application and disappointment of non-election to Congress.

A Canadian firm are endeavouring to get an order filled in Charlestown, W. Va., for 2,000,000 feet of sawed lumber, to be used for lock-gates of the Welland Canal. The order was sent south on account of the great dimensions of some of the pieces, there being no trees sufficient

Farmers generally use shingles on the roofs of their buildings, and without doubt they make a good perhaps on the whole, the best, covering. Good pine shingles will last from twenty to thirty years, and the best of shayed cedar nearly as long. Sawed shingles are not nearly as durable as shayed ones. The nails seem to rust off with the sawed shingles, and the roof in a few years becomes leaky. If the shingles, whether shayed or sawed, be dipped in lime water before being laid they will last much longer. We have seen shingles laid that were first dipped in strong lime water, and when well dried were dipped into thin red paint and after the roof was covered, it was again painted. Roofs so treated will last more than enough longer to pay the additional cost. In a country where shingles are very cheap, this would not be of much consequence, but generally it would be, and we call attention to it, because the lime water and paint are within reach of all, and can be easily used.

BEARING-REINS FOR HORSES.

The British Medical Journal thus protests: Physiology protests against the strained and artificial attitude which the horse is compelled to assume, and which must certainly lessen his power of drawing weights. Humanity and common sense protests against the infliction of this constant gagging strain upon the sensitive mouth of an animal whose mouth is used by the driver as the principal means of guiding and directing him. Nor can any one who has any real knowledge of, or pleasure in the study of animal forms, feel otherwise than gratified at the free and unconstrained attitude of a horse driven without bearing-reins. No good coachman uses bearing-reins for a horse from which he desires to get the full amount of work, or which he desires to leave at ease. Their employment is, indeed, merely a senseless fashion, which has absolutely nothing to recommend it, and in favor of abolition there are reasons so many and decided that we hope that not many years will pass before they are not entirely disused but forgotten.

POTATO PIE

This is a plain family dish, familiar to English families, but apt to be extremely relished, especially by children. It is a convenient way of using meat the second day. Take as much cold roast beef as will half fill a baking dish suited to the size of your family. Add enough gravy, saved from the day before, or lacking that, enough butter and water, in which to stew the beef until quite tender. Then having ready enough Irish potatoes, boiled, mashed, and seasoned with butter, pepper, and salt, and made smooth, with a little cream or rich milk, fill the dish with them to the top, and place in a well-heated oven to bake until nicely browned. It has a very inviting appearance. Tomato catsup or any nice store sauce may be served with it, but should be added at table, as individual taste may suggest.

TO CLEANSE THE WOODWORK AROUND DOORS.

Take a pail of hot water; throw in two tablespoonfuls of pulverised borax; use a good coarse house cloth, an old coarse towel does splendidly—and wash the painting; do not use a brush; when washing places that are extra yellow are stained, soap the cloth; then sprinkle it with dry powdered borax, and rub the places well, using plenty of rinsing water; by washing the woodwork in this way you will not remove the paint, and the borax will soften and make the hands white—a fact well worth knowing.

The use of borax in domestic economy are numerous; and one of the most valuable is its employment to aid the detergent properties of soap.—Scientific American

The order was sent south on account of the great dimensions of some of the pieces, there being no trees sufficiently large for the purpose in Canada.

The French papers in Quebec, are dissatisfied because the new city police force is composed of thirty-three English speaking men, and only twenty French Canadians. On the other hand, the English papers call attention to the fact that the new Government force, numbering nineteen, has only three on the list who are not Frenchmen.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—The San Francisco coast survey observer telegraphs that the earthquake waves registered at the entrance to the harbour commenced on Thursday morning at 6.18 continuing until Friday afternoon at 5. The wave of a great earthquake in Japan, some years ago, was twenty-three minutes in traversing the Pacific Ocean to San Francisco.

Messrs James and John Meiklejohn of lot 22 in the 12th con. of Rawdon near Belleville, last week succeeded in killing a large black bear, which had infested the neighborhood for some time past. The animal measured seven feet from the tip of his snout to the root of his tail, and was in fine condition, thirty-three pounds of fat having been taken from between the shoulders and off the back.

The preparations for the festivities in connection with the inauguration of the city of Brantford, on the 31st inst., are progressing favourably. Answers of acceptance have been received from a number of fire companies, comprising in all about one thousand men. Large subscriptions are being made to defray expenses. The 31st is expected to be the greatest day Brantford has ever seen.

Sir Edward Thornton has been made British Minister at Madrid. This is a promotion at the rate of $10,000, or in other words, Sir Edward will receive that much more per annum for his diplomatic services at Madrid than he did for like services at Washington. This distinction arises from the fact that Madrid is yet the home of royalty, and consequently more expensive for a Minister to live in. Sir Edward well deserves the promotion.

A LECTURE TO YOUNG MEN.

WE have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, of this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure, so simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

For the information of Christian generally, it may be briefly stated that this Institution, now in full operation, owes its origin to the liberality of a Christian gentleman, a resident of Toronto, who has invested a portion of his means in the enterprise, as a free will offering to the Lord, with the view of scattering broadcast over our land, Tracts, Books, &c., which unfold the exalted privileges of the believers, and treat of the "LIFE OF ETERNITY" or Trust, and of the power and peace of Holiness, and Gospel and Evangelical Literature.

Special notice is called to the fact that this is

No Denominational Institution.

It is neither connected with, nor under the patronage of any particular church. All the Publications it issues will be strictly evangelical, and will meet the wants of all Christians. Largely the Books, &c., &c., will be those published by the Willard Tract Repository of Boston, under the care of the well known Dr. CULLIS.

ALL PROFITS that may be made will be devoted to the establishment of a fund for gratuitous distribution of the Tracts and Books to persons and places where they are needed, as may be directed by the Committee. We beg also to say that this Fund for free distribution is open for donations to all who may desire to help in this work of God.

We ask all who may desire to promote the higher spiritual life of the churches and to hold in winning souls for Christ, to co-operate with us by circulating sound religious literature throughout the land.

References for further information may be made to the following brethren (and others who may be asked), who will act as a Committee for selection and distribution.

For the information of Christian generally,
it may be briefly stated that this Institution,
now in full operation, owes its origin to the liberality of a Christian gentleman, a resident of Toronto, who has invested a portion of his means in the enterprise, as a free will offering to the Lord, with the view of scattering broadcast over our land, Tracts, Books, &c., &c., which unfold
the exalted privileges of the believers, and treat of the "LIFE OF FAITH" or Trust, and of the power and peace of HOLINESS, and Gospel and Evangelical Literature.

Special notice is called to the fact that this is

No Denominational Institution.

It is neither connected with, nor under the patronage of any particular church. All the publications it issues will be strictly evangelical, and will meet the wants of all Christians. Large the Books, &c., &c., will be those published by the Willard Street Depository of Boston, under the care of the well known Dr. CUTLER.

ALL PROFITS that may be made will be devoted to the establishment of a fund for gratuitous distribution of the Tracts and Books, to persons and places where they are needed, as may be directed by the Committee. We beg also to say that this Fund for free distribution is open for donations to all who may desire to help in this work of God.

We ask all who may desire to promote the higher spiritual life of the churches and be held in winning souls for Christ, to co-operate with us by circulating sound religious literature
throughout the land.

References for further information may be made to the following brethren (and others who may be added), who will act as a Committee for selection and distribution.

DEAR SIR—Being desirous that others may know something of the merits of your OXIT-

you what it has done for me. I am twenty-

ness and pain under the shoulder blades and
through the shoulders, with very lame back,
and a feeling in my right lung as though there
was a weight bearing it down, with continual
dropping in the throat and down upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I commenced taking your Catarrh Remedy, one bottle of which eased my pains and gave me an
improved appetite, and after taking four bottles I was restored to health so as to be able to endure hard and continued labor, such as chopping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I attribute solely, with God's blessing, to the use
of your Catarrh Remedy.

HOW SHE WAS CURED.

"Ida," said Mr. Harland, one morning, "I wish you would give up that very unladylike habit you have of using slang phrases. Such expressions as 'You bet,' and 'Not by a jug full,' sound vulgar when used by young men, but when a lady condescends to such expressions they are positively revolting."

"Why, mamma," and pretty black-eyed Ida looked up with a mischievous smile, "it is becoming quite the fashion. Everybody—I mean all the girls—use them now-a-days."

"Not everybody, Ida," replied Mrs. Harland; "not those who are refined and sensitive, among either young or old. I think I have often been in the company of well bred people, and not a word of slang was spoken. Consider for a moment, my dear, how coarse and vulgar it would seem in your papa or myself if our usual habit was to talk after the fashion."

"I don't know," laughed Ida; "it would be so comical—rather jolly, I fancy. Odd, too! I just wish you would. Then we'd be a fraternity of slang, wouldn't we? But there's the clock—always on the strike when I'm not half ready. Good morning, mamma! I must scurry."

Ida, coming straight from school, ran into the sitting room as usual, for a kiss when she was greeted by her mother with the exclamation:

"Hello, puss! You home again?"

Ida for a brief second looked her as

THE NEW LONDON SENSATION.

"Lulu," well known here—is thus spoken of by Lloyd's Weekly, of London, England:—

Westminster Aquarium.—Rambles about London have been for some little time puzzled by a mysterious poster, on which were depicted the letters Z A Z E L being fired out of a cannon. On Saturday afternoon we responded to an invitation to visit the Aquarium, and found Zazel to be the name given to a young lady who may justly be described as one of the fairest, most graceful, and daring performers ever seen upon the trapeze. After being raised to a small platform near the roof, she proceeded to walk across the building on a "cobweb," represented by a wire no thicker than a piece of ordinary whiplard. The return journey was varied by the performer sitting and lying down on her slender support; but whether freely running along, or treading her way slowly with baskets on her feet, she appeared equally safe. At a given signal she was withdrawn, and Zazel was seen suspended from the trapeze, on which she proceeded to perform all the most difficult feats of swinging, hanging, balancing, &c. Then mounting higher she dived headforemost from the topmost bar, turning just before the end of her 50-feet plunge, and alighting on her back on the carpeted net. This feat sent a thrill through the audience, which was followed by loud cheering when the fair artist leaped to her feet and bounded smiling off. Then came the sensation depicted on the poster. On one side of the stage, over the heads of the audience, was slung what looked like a huge cannon, and into this Zazel was duly loaded, only her hair being left just visible from the muzzle. In reply to the inquiry "Are you ready?" came the word "Go," when the fuse was instantly fired, and the young lady was shot forth with a loud explosion, her flight being followed by a cloud of smoke. The vast net spread beneath, some forty feet wide, rendered everything perfectly secure, and the animated bullet turned and ran nimbly off, evidently none the worse for her daring exploit. We heard a rumor that some person, animated by over anxiety, or a worse motive, had written to the police authorities describing the feat as excessively dangerous, whereupon an inspector of the force was deputed to attend; but he arrived at the conclusion that every means had been taken to secure the safety of the young lady, and therefore the Easter sensation of 1877 will be given every day at the Aquarium.

A GREEK FUNERAL.

The Constantinople correspondent of an Edinburgh paper refers to the death of his washerwoman as follows:—"A few hours before the funeral the body was placed in a bath filled with wine, and there washed by the priest and his deacon. The corpse was afterward dressed in the best costumes of the deceased, and laid, face uncovered, in the coffin. This being done, the priest recited certain prayers, and sprinkled the coffin with holy water, and this was also done by the relatives and their friends. The corpse was then carried out by bearers, and on

TO A GORILLA IN A MENAGERIE.

"Oh mighty ape!
Half beast, half man,
Thy uncouth shape,
Betrays a plan
The gulf of Being at a bound to span,
Thou art the link between ourselves and brutes
Lifting the lower to a higher plane;
Thy human face all cavillers refutes,
How sneer at Darwin as a dreamer vain.
Who earnest thou beneath this canvas tent!
Within this cage? behind these iron bars?
Thou, whose young in tropic lands were spent,
With strange companions, under foreign stars?
Art thou not lonely? what is life to thee
Thus mewed in prison' innocent of crime,
Become a spectacle for crowds to see,
And reckless boys to jeer at all the time?
Hast thou no feeling such as we possess?
Art thou devoid of any sense of shame?
Rise up, Oh brother, and thy wrongs redress:
Rise in thy might, and be no longer tame!"

I paused in my apostrophe; the animal arose;
He seized the bars that penned him in; my blood
In terror froze.
He shook the cage from side to side; the frightened people fled;
Then in a tone of savage wrath the horrid monster said:
"I'm hired by the wake to wear the dirty cravat Thy'st skin;
I come from Tipperary, and me name is Mickey Flynn"
—Scribner for June.

A STRANGE DREAM.

As illustrating the manner in which impressions of the past may emerge from the brain, I shall here furnish an instance bordering closely on the supernatural, and fairly representing the most marvelous of these psychological phenomena. It occurred to a physician; who related it, in my hearing, to a circle whose conversation had turned on the subject of personal fear. "What you are saying," he remarked, "may be very true; but I can assure you that the sentiment of fear, in its utmost degree, is much less common than you suppose; and though you may be surprised to hear me say it, I know from personal experience that this is certainly so. When I was five or six years old, I dreamed that I was passing by a large pond of water in a very solitary place. On the other side of it there stood a great tree that looked as if it had been struck by lightning, and in the pond at another part an old fallen trunk, on one of the prone limbs of which there was a turtle sunning himself. On a sudden a wind arose, which forced me into the pond, and in my dying struggles to extricate myself from its green and slimy waters I awoke, trembling with terror."

"About eight years subsequently, while recovering from a nearly fatal attack of scarlet fever, this dream presented itself to me, identical in all respects, again. Even up to this time I think I had never seen a living tortoise or turtle, but I indistinctly remember that there was a picture of one in the first spelling-book that had been given me. Perhaps on account of my critical condition, this second dream impressed me more dreadfully than the first."

"A dozen years more elapsed. I had become a physician, and was now actively pursuing my professional duties in one of the Southern States. It so fell out that one July afternoon I had to take a long and wearisome ride on horseback. It was Sunday, and extremely hot; the path was solitary, there was not a house for miles. The forest had that intense silence so characteristic of this time of the day, all the wild animals and birds had gone to their retreats to be rid of the heat of the sun. Suddenly

I think I have often been in the company of well bred people, and not a word of slang was spoken. Consider for a moment, my dear, how coarse and vulgar it would seem in your papa or myself if our usual habit was to talk after the fashion."

"I don't know," laughed Ida; "it would be so comical—rather jolly, I fancy Odd, too! I just wish you would. Then we'd be a fraternity of slang, wouldn't we? But there's the clock—always on the strike when I'm not half ready. Good morning, mamma! I must scurry."

Mrs. Harland sighed to herself. Ida was her only daughter, and it pained her to feel that she was under the influence of coarse companionship. "As for the school girls of the present day! 'What will the future bring?'"

When Mr. Harland came home to dinner his wife and he went into conference that seemed to result in satisfaction and some fun, for he laughed heartily and declared that he would see what he could do, for it was worth trying. Ida's brothers were also let into the secret, and they, too, declared that it was a grand idea and might cure her.

Ida, coming straight from school, ran into the sitting room, as usual, for a kiss when she was greeted by her mother with the exclamation:

"Hello, pard! You home again?"

Ida for a brief second looked her astonishment; then she answered merrily: "Yes, mamma, 'right side up with care," as they say on the china boxes."

"Oh, cheese it! I don't chew any gum, but once," replied her mother, restraining herself by a violent effort, though she could hardly keep a grave face at Ida's surprise.

"Nor leather," Ida responded, with a light and rather constrained laugh, and went to the piano to practice a new song.

"I say, sis, shut that off!" cried her father, who had entered the room.

"We'll excuse the squalling just now. Hash is ready, and let's waltz down to it."

"What waltz shall I play?" queried Ida, with another faint laugh.

"I say, ha'n't this been a jolly day?" exclaimed her brother Ned.

"Hunk-dery!" Sam responded—the grave, lawyer-like Sam, with whom no one dared to take liberty. Did Ida's ears serve her right, or was home really getting "topsey turvey," in her own favorite language.

"Bet your life," added Ned, coolly. "Say, sis, how are you at school—up a tree?"

"Yes, at the top," retorted Ida, no longer laughing, but just a little inclined to pout.

"Bet your sweet life you'll fall soon, then," was the courteous answer.

"Well, it won't be your fall, will it?" and Ida bit her lip.

"Papa," said Ida, after an almost silent dinner, for, some way, the slang seemed to get of place, "may I take lessons off Miss Parker, the new teacher? She's awful sweet, and the girls are going wild over her."

"Are they? Then I suppose she is what you would call bully, eh? Do you think she really knows her biz? If she don't, you see, I'd rather you wouldn't have any truck with her. You see, it isn't every mosey who sets herself up who makes the best sort of teachers and that kind of thing is guzzy and getting played out."

"She isn't played out," retorted Ida with spirit. "If you could hear her play you wouldn't think so."

"Undoubtedly you think so, my tender cherub," her father said with a grave face; "but most teachers don't pan out worth a cent. just visible from the muzzle. In reply to the inquiry "Are you ready?" came the word "Go," when the fuze was instantly fired, and the young lady was shot forth with a loud explosion, her flight being followed by a cloud of smoke. The vast net spread beneath, some forty feet wide, rendered everything perfectly secure, and the animated bullet turned and ran nimbly off, evidently none the worse for her daring exploit. We heard a rumor that some person, animated by over anxiety, or a worse motive, had written to the police authorities describing the feat as excessively dangerous, whereupon an inspector of the force was deputed to attend; but he arrived at the conclusion that every means had been taken to secure the safety of the young lady, and therefore the Easter sensation of 1877 will be given every day at the Aquarium.

A GREEK FUNERAL.

The Constantinople correspondent of an Edinburgh paper refers to the death of his washerwoman as follows:—"A few hours before the funeral the body was placed in a bath filled with wine, and there washed by the priest and his deacon. The corpse was afterward dressed in the best costumes of the deceased, and laid, face uncovered, in the coffin. This being done, the priest recited certain prayers, and sprinkled the coffin with holy water, and this was also done by the relatives and their friends. The corpse was then carried out by bearers, and on reaching the door of the cottage the person the most dear to the deceased approached, bearing a cup full of white wine and a sponge, and after having had them blessed by the priest, proceeded to wash the mouth of the dead woman with the wine as a symbol of washing away her iniquities. This done, the cup was thrown on the ground, trod on, broken in many pieces, and its fragments hastily covered over with earth or thrown into the sea. The funeral procession was then formed, and started in the following order:—First came the deacon, carrying the lid of the coffin, and accompanied by three friends of the deceased—one carrying a tray covered with numerous small glasses, another with a tray with small bits of toasted bread, and the third carrying a large bottle of wine. These were followed by the choristers, the priest, the body (the face uncovered), and lastly, by the relatives and friends. In this order the company paraded through all the streets of the village, the women of the family assisted by the professional weeping women, crying and loudly lamenting, and all afterward returned to the house of the deceased. There the corpse was laid for a few minutes on the ground at the entrance, and then taken up and held high in the air by the bearers, the relatives and friends thereupon passing under the coffin as a token of respect for the dead. The funeral thereafter proceeded to the church, where, while the usual ceremonies were being gone through, the wine and toast were handed round, and each person partook of them, saying in a loud voice, 'May the Lord receive her,' the deacon answering each time, 'Amen,' and incensing the speakers. A fresh collection was made for the family, and then the funeral started for the burial ground. There the corpse was deposited in its finery, the coffin covered up and laid in the earth, amid the fresh lamentations of the women. Sweetmeats were then thrown on the grave and each assistant was bound to pick one up and eat it, saying afresh, 'May the Lord receive her.' The funeral having thus concluded, the family and friends retired to the nearest cafe, where I had the satisfaction of seeing the husband of the defunct washerwoman consoling himself by getting gloriously drunk on 'raki,' a kind of white brandy which is largely drunk by the lower orders in this country. Three days after the funeral, plates of boiled barley covered with sugar, called 'colivas,' were sent round to all the acquaintances of the family, and eaten in memory of the deceased. This latter custom in the richer families is renewed three months and nine months after the death.

from personal experience that this is certainly so. When I was five or six years old, I dreamed that I was passing by a large pond of water in a very solitary place. On the other side of it there stood a great tree that looked as if it had been struck by lightning, and in the pond at another part an old fallen trunk, on one of the prone limbs of which there was a turtle sunning himself. On a sudden a wind arose, which forced me into the pond, and in my dying struggles to extricate myself from its green and slimy waters I awoke, trembling with terror.

"About eight years subsequently, while recovering from a nearly fatal attack of scarlet fever, this dream presented itself to me, identical in all respects, again. Even up to this time I think I had never seen a living tortoise or turtle, but I distinctly remember that there was a picture of one in the first spelling-book that had been given me. Perhaps on account of my critical condition, this second dream impressed me more dreadfully than the first.

"A dozen years more elapsed. I had become a physician, and was now actively pursuing my professional duties in one of the Southern States. It so fell out that one July afternoon I had to take a long and wearisome ride on horseback. It was Sunday, and extremely hot; the path was solitary, there was not a house for miles. The forest had that intense silence so characteristic of this time of the day; all the wild animals and birds had gone to their retreats to be rid of the heat of the sun. Suddenly at one point of the road I came upon a great stagnant water pool, and casting my eyes across it, there stood a pine-tree blasted by lightning, and on a log that was nearly even with the surface a turtle was basking in the sun. The dream of my infancy was upon me, the bridle fell from my hands, and unutterable fear overshadowed me, up I slunk away from the accursed place.

"Though business occasionally afterward would have drawn me that way, I could not summon resolution to go, and actually have taken roundabout paths. It seemed to me profoundly amazing that the dream that I had had should after twenty years be realized, without respect to difference of scene, or climate, or age. A good clergyman of my acquaintance to my spiritual advantage, and in his kind enthusiasm—for he knew that I had been more than once brought to the point of death by such fevers—interpreted my dream that I should die of marsh miasm.

"Most persons have doubtless observed that they suddenly encounter events of a trivial nature, in their course of life, of which they have an indistinct recollection that they have dreamed before. For a long time it seemed to me that this was a case of that kind, and that it might be set down among the mysterious and unaccountable. How wonderful it is that we so often fail to see the simple explanation of things, when that explanation is actually intruding itself before us! And so in this case; it was long before the truth gleaned in upon me, before my reasoning powers shook off the delusive impressions of my senses. But it occurred at last; for I said to myself, is it more probable that such a mystery is true, or that I have dreamed for the third time that which I had already dreamed of twice before? Have I really seen the blasted tree and the sunning turtle? Are a weary ride of fifty miles, the noontide heat, the silence that could almost be felt, no provocation to a dream? I have ridden under such circumstances many a mile fast asleep, and have awoke and known it; and so I resolved that if ever circumstances carried me to those parts again, I would satisfy myself as to the matter.

"Accordingly, after a few years, when an incident led me to travel there, I revisited the well-remembered scene. There was still the stagnant pool, but the blasted pine-tree was gone; and after I had pushed my horse through the marshy thicket as far as I could force him, and then dismounted and pursued a close investigation on foot in every direction around the spot, I was clearly convinced that no pine-tree had ever grown there;

"I know it," sobbed Ida, "and am horrible, and I ask everybody's pardon for offending their ears. But papa, and she half smiled, I never talked as you reply, "and I have been almost tempted

"Well, then, I won't," he responded laughing. "I think you have had a good matter drop now and not even refer to it again."

I am happy to say that by this lesson
 Ida was completely cured.

ENGLISH MOTHERS.

It is a marked feature of social life in England, and certainly one of its especial charms, that mothers and daughters are so uniformly seen together at their own homes. Not only is the mother the first lady to whom you visit, but mistress of ceremonies throughout. Not only does she preside at the dinner table, but in the evening party she sits as queen.
 Whatever may be your first impression of such an arrangement—if it happens that your sympathies are with the younger ladies—you will very soon learn to think that the mother's absence would be very sincerely regretted by the daughters. As a picture all must admit the arrangement to be perfect. The portly form and matronly dignity of the mother are an exquisite foil to the youthful beauty and maiden coyness of the daughters. And you will find nothing to mar, but everything to enhance, the interest of the picture. The mother's presence never seems to operate as an unwelcome restraint. Between her and the daughters you will mark the most joyful, playful, loving freedom, without the sacrifice of a little parental dignity and authority on the one hand, or of sweet, graceful filial duty on the other. It may be said of English families generally, that these two things are eminently characteristic, to wit: uniform parental authority and the most charming freedom of intercourse between parents and their children.

 of death by such fevers—interpreted my dream that I should die of marsh miasm.

"Most persons have doubtless observed that they suddenly encounter events of a trivial nature, in their course of life, of which they have an indistinct recollection that they have dreamed before. For a long time it seemed to me that this was a case of that kind, and that it might be set down among the mysterious and unaccountable. How wonderful it is that we so often fail to see the simple explanation of things, when that explanation is actually intruding itself before us! And so in this case; it was long before the truth gleamed in upon me, before my reasoning powers shook off the delusive impressions of my senses. But it occured at last; for I said to myself, is it more probable that such a mystery is true, or that I have dreamed for the third time that which I had already dreamed of twice before? Have I really seen the blasted tree and the sunning turtle? Are a weary ride of fifty miles, the noontide heat, the silence that could almost be felt, no provocation to a dream? I have ridden under such circumstances many a mile fast asleep, and have awoke and known it; and so I resolved that if ever circumstances carried me to those parts again, I would satisfy myself as to the matter.

"Accordingly, after a few years, when an incident led me to travel there, I revisited the well-remembered scene. There was still the stagnant pool, but the blasted pine-tree was gone; and after I had pushed my horse through the marshy thicket as far as I could force him, and then dismounted and pursued a close investigation on foot in every direction around the spot, I was clearly convinced that no pine-tree had ever grown there;
 not a stump nor any token of its remains could be seen; and so now I have concluded that at the glimpse of the water,
 with the readiness of those who are falling asleep, I had adopted an external fact into a dream; that it had aroused the trains of thought which in former years had occupied me, and that, in fine, the mystery was all a delusion, and that I had been frightened with less than a shadow."

The instructive story of this physician teaches us how readily and yet how impressively the remains of old ideas may be recalled; how they may, as it were, be projected into the space beyond us, and take a position among existing realities.
 For this all that is necessary is that there should be an equalization of old impressions with new sensations, and that may be accomplished either by diminishing
 the force of present sensations, or by increasing the activity of those parts of the brain in which the old impressions are stored up.

Thus, when we are falling asleep, the organs of sense no longer convey their special impressions with the clearness and force that they did in our waking hours, and this gives to the traces that are stored up in the brain the power of drawing upon themselves the attention of the mind.—Dr. J. W. DRAPER, in Harper's Magazine.

THE LICENSED LIQUOR SELL-STAMPER.

The full extent of the Moffett Liquor Law of Virginia, which went into operation last month, shows that, in one respect at least, it is a curiosity in legislation. The attempt is to be made to collect a tax on liquor, or, more properly, to determine the amount to be collected, by machinery. In addition to the payment of the usual amount for a license, each bar-room keeper or retail liquor dealer is required to hire from the revenue commissioner of his district an "apparatus," said to resemble a gas meter in appearance, and termed a "bar-room register." It operates in a manner analogous to that of the familiar "bell punch" or "indicator" of the street railways of our large cities. The law directs each bar-room keeper immediately upon the sale of each drink of wine, potent spirits, malt liquors, or any mixture thereof, in the presence of the purchaser or person to whom it is delivered, to turn the crank of the proper register until the bell has struck once, and the indicator on its dial has moved one point or number for each drink sold by him. The registers are to be inspected monthly and the tax imposed is 2½ cents for each drink or half a pint of wine spirit, and half a cent for the same quantity of malt liquor. The introduction of the "apparatus" is the only novelty in this law. With the exception of informers (who are allowed one-third of the fine imposed for disobeying the law), and possibly also the manufacturer of the indicator, no one can be particularly interested in its enforcement; and every regular toper may be expected to connive at the breaking of a law, the direct tendency of which is to raise the cost of drinking.

A CENTENNIAL MYSTERY CLEARED UP.

Here is a true story from Philadelphia, with all the elements of mystery and dramatic horror for which our modern novelists and playwrights strive in vain. Two or three months after the Exposition closed the dead body of a man was found in a lonely gorge, six miles from the city, too much decomposed for recognition, and without the slightest clue in his clothing by which to identify him. It was supposed that he had been a guest at the Grangers' Hotel, which was an enormous temporary barracks to which thousands of transient lodgers came daily. No register was kept, nor could any account be taken of them after they paid for their room in advance. What could be more unlikely than that this unrecognizable body could be identified as one of the nameless millions who came and went through Philadelphia last year, or that his murderer should be found?

Yet, by a chance letter to a prominent newspaper publisher from Germany, the whole strange story is laid bare. The murdered man proves to be a young German of a wealthy family who came to Philadelphia last summer. At this Grangers' Hotel he fell in with another German and formed a close companionship with him. The stranger learned all his secrets, the particulars of his business and family life, obtained letters from him, from which he studied his handwriting, peculiarities of expression, etc. When his plans were ripe he enticed the young fellow out to this lonely gorge, killed him, took possession of his trunk and other property, and opened a correspondence with his family in Germany. Since last October this correspondence has been carried on, the murderer personating his victim and obtaining by pleas of illness, losses, etc., large sums of money. Prompt means are being taken for the arrest of the murderer.

NEW LONDON SENSATION.

London have been for some little time puzzled by a mysterious poster, on which were depicted the letters "E. L." being fired out of a cannon. On Saturday afternoon we responded to the invitation to visit the Aquarium, and found Zazel to be the name given to a lady who may justly be described as the fairest, most graceful, and most perfect ever seen upon the stage. After being raised to a small room near the roof, she proceeded to address the building on a "cobweb," sent by a wire no thicker than a hair of ordinary whipcord. The return of the signal was varied by the performer and lying down on her slender form; but whether freely running, or treading her way slowly with her feet, she appeared equally graceful.

At a given signal she was within, and Zazel was seen suspended
the trapeze, on which she proceeded mounting higher, she dived headfirst from the topmost bar, turning lighting on her back on the carpeted floor. This feat sent a thrill through the audience, which was followed by loud cries when the fair artist leaped to the ground and bounded smiling off. Then the sensation depicted on the poster.

On the side of the stage, over the heads of the audience, was slung what looked like a huge cannon, and into this Zazel climbed, only her hair being left visible from the muzzle. In reply to inquiry "Are you ready?" came the word "Go," when the fuse was instantly fired, and the young lady was forthwith with a loud explosion, her body being followed by a cloud of smoke.
At her feet spread beneath, some forty feet, rendered everything perfectly clear, and the animated bullet turned in vainly off, evidently none the less for her daring exploit. We heard of that some person, animated by curiosity, or a worse motive, had gone to the police authorities describing the feat as excessively dangerous,
upon an inspector of the force being put to attend; but he arrived at the conclusion that every means had been taken to secure the safety of the lady, and therefore the Easter festival of 1877 will be given every

And reckless boys to jeer at all the time?
Hast thou no feeling such as we possess?
Art thou devoid of any sense of shame?
Rise up, Oh brother, and thy wrongs redress:
Rise in thy might, and be no longer tame!"

I paused in my apostrophe; the animal arose;
He seized the bars that penned him in; my blood
in terror froze;
He shook the cage from side to side; the frightened people fled;
Then in a tone of savage wrath the horrid monster said:
"I'm hired by the wack to wear the dirty cray-thur's skin;
I come from Tipperary, and me name is Mickey Flynn."

A STRANGE DREAM.

As illustrating the manner in which impressions of the past may emerge from the brain, I shall here furnish an instance bordering closely on the supernatural,
and fairly representing the most marvelous of these psychological phenomena. It occurred to a physician; who related it,
in my hearing, to a circle whose conversation had turned on the subject of personal fear. "What you are saying," he remarked, "may be very true; but I can assure you that the sentiment of fear, in its utmost degree, is much less common than you suppose; and though you may be surprised to hear me say it, I know from personal experience that this is certainly so. When I was five or six years old, I dreamed that I was passing by a large pond of water in a very solitary place. On the other side of it there stood a great tree that looked as if it had been struck by lightning, and in the pond at another part an old fallen trunk, on one of the prone limbs of which there was a turtle sunning himself. On a sudden a wind arose, which forced me into the pond, and in my dying struggles to extricate myself from its green and slimy waters I awoke, trembling with terror.

"About eight years subsequently, while recovering from a nearly fatal attack of scarlet fever, this dream presented itself
to me, identical in all respects, again.
Even up to this time I think I had never seen a living tortoise or turtle, but I in-distinctly remember that there was a picture of one in the first spelling-book that had been given me. Perhaps on account of my critical condition, this second dream impressed me more dreadfully than the first.

"A dozen years more elapsed. I had become a physician, and was now actively pursuing my professional duties in one of the Southern States. It so fell out that one July afternoon I had to take a long and wearisome ride on horseback.
It was Sunday, and extremely hot; the path was solitary, there was not a house for miles. The forest had that intense silence so characteristic of this time of the day—all the wild animals and birds guard for their safety, of course). There can be no healthier pastime for boys or girls of dyspeptic or consumptive tendencies than paddling the summer away in a light skiff. We know of more than one child—a few years ago narrow-chested, pale, stooped-shouldered, subject to incessant headaches in school, who is now broad-breasted and ruddy, simply from the exercise of rowing during the summer months.

2. Pack up all the finery of both girls and boys and—leave it at home. Have stout, well-fitting shoes made for them to stand, without heels. Clothe the whole of them in flannel. Navy blue at forty-five or fifty cents per yard is the best.
Pretty and cheap loose-fitting suits of this are the most artistic dress for child or adult on the sea-side, hills, or wherever tramping, and sudden showers, and downright fun are the rule. Flannel is,
by all odds, the coolest dress to wear in the hot season, and an almost certain preventative of colds, neuralgia, etc.

3. If there are boys, you will find it a wise investment to spend $6 or $8 for a shelter tent. They could sleep in it, if necessary, with benefit to health, but in any case they can carry it to lonely solitudes back of the barn, or up on the mountain, and camp out all day and night, cooking their own meals and keeping up a watch-fire.

4. Provide for rainy days—a checkerboard, decoleomanie pictures, story books, and especially good humor. A family stranded upon the barren shore of a farm house with nothing but their trunks is a spectacle not edifying to gods or man.—

THE SIOUX AS CAVALRY.

Gen. Crooks is not disposed to belittle
the foes whom he has been fighting since last spring.—He thinks that an Indian warrior makes the best cavalryman in the world, and he is undoubtedly right. In his annual report he says:—"When the Sioux Indian was armed with a bow and arrow he was more formidable, fighting
as he does most of the time on horseback,
than when he had the old-fashioned muzzle-loading rifle. But when he came into possession of the breech-loader and metallic cartridge, which allows him to load and re-fire from his horse with perfect ease, he became ten thousand times more formidable. With the improved arms I have seen our friendly Indians, riding at full speed shoot, and kill a wolf, also on the run, while it is a rare thing that our troops can hit an Indian on horseback, though the soldier may be on his feet at the time. The Sioux is a cavalry soldier from the time he has intelligence to ride a horse or fire a gun. If he wishes to dismount, his hardy pony, educated by long usage, will graze around near where he had been left, ready, when the master wants to mount, either to move forward or escape. Even with their lodges and families they can move at the rate of fifty miles per day. They are perfectly familiar with the country, have their spies and hunting parties out all the time at distances of from twenty to fifty miles—each way from their villages, know the number and movement of all troops that may be operating against them, and are nizable body could be identified as one of the nameless millions who came and went through Philadelphia last year, or that his murderer should be found ?

Yet, by a chance letter to a prominent newspaper publisher from Germany, the whole strange story is laid bare. The murdered man proves to be a young German of a wealthy family who came to Philadelphia last summer. At this Grangers' Hotel he fell in with another German and formed a close companionship with him. The stranger learned all his secrets, the particulars of his business and family life, obtained letters from him, from which he studied his handwriting, peculiarities of expression, etc. When his plans were ripe he enticed the young fellow out to this lonely gorge, killed him, took possession of his trunk and other property, and opened a correspondence with his family in Germany. Since last October this correspondence has been carried on, the murderer personating his victim and obtaining by pleas of illness, losses etc., large sums of money. Prompt means are being taken for the arrest of the murderer.

THE INTELLIGENT PARROT.

Mr. Bayard Taylor, writing of animal nature in The Atlantic, tells this story of a parrot owned by a friend in Chicago. When the great fire was raging, its owner saw that she could rescue nothing except what she instantly took in her hands. There were two objects equally dear, the parrot and the old family Bible, and she could take but one. After a moment of hasty hesitation she seized the Bible, and was hastening away, when the parrot cried out in a loud and solemn voice "God! God, deliver us!" No human being could have been deaf to such an appeal; the precious Bible was sacrificed and the bird saved. He was otherwise a clever bird. In the home to which he was taken there were among other visitors a gentleman rather noted for his volubility. When the parrot first heard him it listened in silence for some time, then to the amazement of all present it said very emphatically, "You talk too much!" The gentleman, at first embarrassed, presently resumed his interrupted discourse. Thereupon the parrot laid his head on one side, gave an indescribably comical and contemptuous "H'm—m!" and added, "There he goes again!"

MARKSMANSHIP.

It is surprising, says the Missouri Republican, how few people there are who can throw with any accuracy at a mark, even at close range, and it is more surprising how few people there are who know this fact. The average man or boy will laugh at you if you tell him he cannot stand thirty feet off and hit an object presenting a surface of a foot square, and will be willing to bet his boots that he can do it nearly every time; but he would lose the boots. In recognition of this prevalent over-confidence, some enterprising sharp has set up a catch-permy affair on the street, which is yielding him a handsome profit. A board screen has a place about a foot square cut in its centre, which is illuminated as a target, and the conceited public is permitted to stand about thirty feet and whack away at the centre piece with a base ball at the rate of ten cents for three throws. To hit the centre piece once in three times is to win a cigar. To hit it twice in three times is to win a cigar and a chromo of the gaudiest pattern. To hit it three times in succession is to win a cigar, a chromo, and fifty cents. It was as good as a play yesterday to watch the passers-by taking in their ten-cent surprises.

THE GODDESS OF FASHION IN TURKEY.

A correspondent writer from Constantinople—"The Minister of Police has issued a notice ordering the faithful of both sexes to attend the mosques with greater regularity, and threatening those who habitually stay away from the mosque with punishment. He has also enjoined the women to give up the fashionable the most of the dead woman with me as a symbol of washing away her sins. This done, the cup was on the ground, trod on, broken in pieces, and its fragments hastily trodden with earth or thrown into the fire. The funeral procession was then started in the following order:—First came the deacon, carrying the coffin, and accompanied by friends of the deceased—one carrying covered with numerous small flowers, another with a tray with small toasted bread, and the third carrying a bottle of wine. These were followed by the choristers, the priest, the wife (uncovered), and lastly, by relatives and friends. In this order the party paraded through all the streets of the village, the women of the family assisted by the professional weepers, crying and loudly lamenting, afterward returned to the house of the deceased. There the corpse was laid out for a few minutes on the ground at the head of the house, and then taken up and placed in the air by the bearers, the friends and relatives thereupon passing the coffin as a token of respect for the dead. The funeral thereafter proceeded to the church, where, while the ceremonies were being gone through, the wine and toast were handed out, and each person partook of them, in a loud voice. 'May the Lord rest the deacon answering each time, and incensing the speakers. A collection was made for the family, and the funeral started for the ground. There the corpse was laid out in its finery, the coffin covered with flowers in the earth, amid the fresh flowers of the women. Sweet-wood was then thrown on the grave, and the assistant was bound to pick one up, saying, 'May the Lord rest the deacon. The funeral having thus ended, the family and friends retired to the nearest cafe, where I had the pleasure of seeing the husband of the washerwoman consoling himself by drinking a glass of brandy, a white brandy which is largely used by the lower orders in this country. Days after the funeral, plates of barley covered with sugar, called 'sweets', were sent round to all the friends of the family, and eaten in the house of the deceased. This latter custom in the richer families is renewed on the eighth and nine months after the funeral.

marked feature of social life in England, and certainly one of its especial characteristics, is that mothers and daughters are rarely seen together at their own homes. Not only is the mother the first whom you visit, but mistress of the house throughout. Not only does she do at the dinner table, but in the evening party she sits as queen. Her may be your first impression of an arrangement—if it happens to be a party of sympathy with the young—she will very soon learn to at the mother's absence would be sincerely regretted by the daughters. A picture all must admit the mother to be perfect. The portly, maternal dignity of the mother, the exquisite foil to the youthful maiden coyness of the daughter, and you will find nothing to mar, nothing to enhance, the interest of the scene. The mother's presence is a constant and an unwelcome one. Between her and the daughter will mark the most joyful, playful freedom, without the sacrificial parental dignity and authority of one hand, or of sweet, grateful y on the other. It may be said that in families generally, that these are eminently characteristic, uniform parental authority and charming freedom, of inter- between parents and their child-

the sum. The dream of my infancy was upon me, the bridle fell from my hands, and unutterable fear overshadowed me, and I slunk away from the accursed place.

"Though business occasionally afterward would have drawn me that way, I could not summon resolution to go, and actually have taken roundabout paths. It seemed to me profoundly amazing that the dream that I had had should after twenty years be realized, without respect to difference of scene, or climate, or age. A good clergyman of my acquaintance to my spiritual advantage, and in his kind enthusiasm—for he knew that I had been more than once brought to the point of death by such fevers—interpreted my dream that I should die of marsh miasm.

"Most persons have doubtless observed that they suddenly encounter events of a trivial nature, in their course of life, of which they have an indistinct recollection that they have dreamed before. For a long time it seemed to me that this was a case of that kind, and that it might be set down among the mysterious and unaccountable. How wonderful it is that we so often fail to see the simple explanation of things, when that explanation is actually intruding itself before us! And so in this case; it was long before the truth gleamed in upon me. Before my reasoning powers shook off the delusive impressions of my senses. But it occurred at last; for I said to myself, is it more probable that such a mystery is true, or that I have dreamed for the third time that which I had already dreamed of twice before? Have I really seen the blasted tree and the sunning turtle? Are a weary ride of fifty miles, the noontide heat, the silence that could almost be felt, no provocation to a dream? I have ridden under such circumstances many a mile first asleep, and have awoke and known it; and so I resolved that if ever circumstances carried me to those parts again, I would satisfy myself as to the matter.

"Accordingly, after a few years, when an incident led me to travel there, I revisited the well-remembered scene. There was still the stagnant pool, but the blasted pine-tree was gone; and after I had pushed my horse through the marshy thicket as far as I could force him, and then dismounted and pursued a close investigation on foot in every direction around the spot, I was clearly convinced that no pine-tree had ever grown there; not a stump nor any token of its remains could be seen; and so now I have concluded that at the glimpse of the water, with the readiness of those who are falling asleep, I had adopted an external fact into a dream; that it had aroused the trains of thought which in former years had occupied me, and that, in fine, the mystery was all a delusion, and that I had been frightened with less than a shadow."

The instructive story of this physician teaches us how readily and yet how impressively the remains of old ideas may be recalled; how they may, as it were, be projected into the space beyond us, and take a position among existing realities. For this all that is necessary is that there should be an equalization of old impressions with new sensations, and that may be accomplished either by diminishing the force of present sensations, or by increasing the activity of those parts of the brain in which the old impressions are stored up.

Thus, when we are falling asleep, the organs of sense no longer convey their special impressions with the clearness and force that they did in our waking hours, and this gives to the traces that are stored up in the brain the power of drawing upon themselves the attention of the mind.—Dr. J. W. DRAPER, in Harper's Magazine.

HINTS FOR THE SUMMER VACATION.

1. If there be any weakly children in the family, make an effort to find a boarding-place near a river or lake, and give them a boat and oars (with due re-

ments at Windsor Castle that were always occupied by Prince Albert, and have never been used since his death. The faithful servant who points them out says that nothing has been touched in them since the fatal fourteenth of December, 1861, when the "blameless prince" quitted these scenes of earthly glory to find, let us hope, even more delightful ones among celestial spheres. The prince's hat and cane stand where he last placed them; the book he was reading is open at the page where he left off; the bed on which he slept and whereon he died stands exactly as it did when he breathed his last; an inscription at its foot records the date of his birth and of his death. To come daily into these deserted rooms and see for herself that the thoughtless hand of some servant has not disturbed any of their pious arrangements; to gaze her fill on the vacant couch, the unfinished book; even (it is said) to herself brush away any trace of dust which may have fallen within the hour upon the cherished relics of her dead husband, is a duty scrupulously performed by the exalted woman and good wife each day when she is at Windsor. It may be that it is the reports of these truly wifely actions—which could not degrade a woman if she were a queen of heaven instead of empress of India—which have spread from lip to lip, and formed a basis for unfounded gossip about the queen's semi-lunacy concerning the prince. That she causes his plate to be placed at all meals, talks to him as if he were present, and other things more shocking than these, are rumors without a grain of truth in them at this time or formerly.

VILLAINY IN THE NAME OF RELIGION.

Rev. Henry Newman Wright, pastor of the Independent Methodist Church at Northville, Long Island, is in trouble. The Trustees engaged him some time ago, but became dissatisfied with him and gave him notice to quit. He refused to go, and the Trustees gave him notice that he would be excluded from the pulpit. Issue was therefore joined, and both sides were determined to have the upper hand. On the succeeding Sunday Mr. Wright preached to a congregation of curiosity-seekers, having obtained an entrance to the church several hours before the Trustees put in an appearance. On the next Sunday, however, the Trustees were masters of the situation. The night previous word was sent around that Rev. Mr. Wright and his friends would break down the doors of the church if refused admittance. The Trustees and their friends wished it to be understood that some heats might be broken if force was attempted. A large crowd collected early in the morning, and were well pleased with the subsequent performance. When Mr. Wright and his friends went up the steps to force the doors, the Trustees and their body guarded pulled them down. It was ludicrous in the extreme. The Trustees came off the victors. Last Sunday there was a very stormy time at the church, and the village was excited all day over the difficulty. Sheriff Smith and a posse of deputies preserved order and dispersed the contending parties. All of Monday the excitement continued. At about 11 o'clock the church was fired and burned to the ground. The contract price for its erection was $6,000, and about $1,000 had been expended in improving it since. At the time that the fire was raging in the church persons who were running to the scene past the residence of Mr. Wright discovered fire under his stoop, and but for this no doubt the personage would have been reduced to ashes also. Each side charges the crime upon the other. The church was fired in several places on the inside, and holes were bored in the floor to give it ventilation.

I shall soon shall have an opportunity of judging whether these orders are obeyed, for it is announced that the Sultan intends to throw the Imperial gardens of Yidiz Kiosk and those of Tcheraghban open to the public every Friday afternoon. Military bands are to play in both gardens."

FRAUDS ON FARMERS.

The latest fraud on the farming community is the spring bed swindle, the modus operandi of which is as follows:—The first of the gang engages storage room in the farmer's barn for spring beds representing himself as agents for the manufacturers. He gets the victim to write down his name and address and departs. Shortly afterwards another stranger informs the farmer that the spring beds he ordered are at the depot, and presents his bill for a large invoice. The farmer disclaims the transaction upon which the collector shows him his signature to a large order for beds. If he still refuses to settle, two more strangers visit him, representing themselves to be the lawyers of the company. They threaten legal proceedings but are willing to compromise for a portion of the claim.

from the shackles of corruption, and the wasting hand of extravagant administration? and those who inveigh most glibly against the official course of Mr Cartwright should not fail to recollect that he assumed and has held office under the most discouraging circumstances. He had left him as a legacy a disorganized and muddled financial condition of the country, brought about by the corrupt course of reckless extravagance of his predecessors in office.

The national folly the Pacific Railway guarantees to British Columbia, handicapped it with its gigantic hands in the start of the race. Public works such as could not brook delay under the expenditure of large sums of money. The hard times and the consequent depression of business throughout the world contracted the avenues of public revenue. In fact every obstacle which circumstances could combine, every obstacle which the jealous malice of an out-of-office faction would throw in his path, he has had to contend with yet he has come out of the fiery trial with—considering everything—triumph. No wonder the reactionist party are straining every nerve, organizing associations, looking after the assessment rolls with a vengeance which would in the interests of honesty perhaps, be the better of a little watching. They see the magnitude of the struggle before them, and concoct their plans accordingly. Let them proceed we await the selection of a victim to make the attempt of redeeming the County of Lennox in the interests of the opposition.

BARNUM'S TATTOOED NOBLEMAN.

A FULL DESCRIPTION OF THE WONDER.

The following full description, from the Bridgeport (Conn.) Daily Standard, of Capt. Costentenus, the wonderfully tattooed Albanian Greek, with P. T. Barnum's new and only Greatest Show on Earth, will be very interesting to our readers:

"We saw at ex-Mayor Barnum's residence, this morning, a wonder of tattooing on the person of Capt. George Costentenus, a descendant of a noble Greek family, from the province of Albania. His statement is that while he, together with an American and a Spaniard, were mining in Chinese Tartary, in 1867 a rebellion arose, and the three joined the insurgents. Ill luck coming to their cause, they were taken prisoners, and subjected to the tattooing process for three months, as a punishment in lieu of having their heads cut off. He says that the process causes such terrible pain that it required six men to hold him while one performed the operation. After it was completed all three escaped from prison, but the American only survived five or six months. The Spaniard lost his eyesight, and died in Morilla; but Capt. Costentenus survives and is in good health. The tattooing was done with indigo and cinnabar, producing blue and red colors; and there is not a single point on his body which is not covered with these colors, so that it is impossible to discover what was the natural color of his skin except by his ears and the soles of his feet, which are the only parts they did not tattoo. He appeared at first sight as though he was clothed with very close-fitting tights, made of a shawl or very soft, fine druggett. Upon a close inspection, however, it is seen that he is entirely naked, and that the apparent tights are an illusion. Moreover, his whole person is found to be covered with a great variety of animal figures, with their names, most ingeniously and skillfully

The Premier and other leaders of the Liberal party will probably address public meetings in various parts of the Dominion during the summer.

BELLEVILLE, May 26.—Elizabeth Fradette, the woman accused jointly with one Geo. Glenn of being guilty of poisoning her husband in the township of Rawdon on Sunday last, was brought here and lodged in gaol yesterday afternoon. She asserted her own innocence and the guilt of Glenn, who has not as yet been arrested. A number of men are scouring the woods in search of him, and his capture is expected.

AMERICAN.

On the arrival of the European steamers at New York on Saturday, the Custom House officers seized a parcel containing suits of gentlemen's clothing of the finest patterns and quality, several rolls of silk and grenadine for ladies' dresses, and also a number of pairs of shoes and other articles. The goods were valued at $1,200, the duties amounting to over $600. The gentlemen's suits were from Poole, the London tailor. The seizure was made on information furnished to Special Agent Brackett, who was told some time ago that an agent for London and Liverpool had been to New York and measured 200 gentlemen for suits, which when done were forwarded to them free of duty through officers of steamships.

The extent of the destitution prevailing throughout the Pennsylvania coal fields is again assuming alarming proportions, and the announcement that the principal coal operators have concluded to suspend mining operations for the month has caused great consternation.

CHESTER, Pa., May 22.—At the launch of the iron steamship Saratoga, at Roach's shipyard this morning, about forty men were under the vessel when it went off, and not hearing the order to come out 7 men were crushed to death. This is the first accident since Roach took the yard, and he has launched some forty vessels. The killed and wounded were workmen engaged in knocking the blocks from under the keel. The scene during the time the ship was going off was heartrending, the men being seen struggling to escape, while the huge blocks rolled by the ship crushed them to jelly. No assistance could possibly be rendered. Flags are at half-mast throughout the town and work at the yard stopped. John Roach ordered money to be furnished to the families of the victims.

On Sunday night disguised men went to Bandyville, Ky., gaol, seized the negro prisoner Levi Pile, who attempted to murder Mrs. Pile, wife of his employer, last week, and dragged him to the woods, where they hung him.

An illicit distillery on Newtown Creek was broken up last night and 8,000 gallons of mash and thirteen hogsheds of molasses seized by United States officers.

Proceedings have been commenced in the English courts on behalf of a number of residents of New York and Long Island to recover, as heirs at law, $12,000,000 in money. It seems that in 1810 Robert Shephard deposited in the Bank of England a million pounds to the credit of his sister, who had married John Shephard and gone to Canada. Lately an advertisement appeared, inviting the heirs of Robert and his sister to claim this money which, it is now estimated, has accumulated to thirteen million dollars. Altogether about eleven persons in this country lay a claim to a share in the money.

THE WAR NEWS.

MURDER OF CHRISTIANS BY TURKS.

In the Turkish village of Jurtuk there is quite a Christian element, though subordinate in numbers to the Turk. On the night of the 16th ult., the latter made a concerted and general attack upon the Christians. Scenes of frightful atrocity took place. The males were indiscriminately to the sword; many the elder women shared the same fate and the younger were brutally outraged. The account given by two Bulgarians who escaped from the town of the outrage and murder of old and young is horrible beyond measure. (The above although contradicted at the time, is now after more careful enquiry, officially confirmed.)

AMERICAN NEUTRALITY—WAR MATERIAL.

Within a short time the Russian Government has loaded three vessels with war material at New York, one of the sailed at the same time as the vessels the Russians squadron, and who are to convey her. Each vessel carried 200 tons of brass metal, three to five million cartridges, and 5,000 barrels gunpowder. Up to the present 200,000 pistols have been shipped to Russia. Another vessel with war munitions for Turkey will sail in July.

There seems little probability of neutrality proclamation being issued by our Government. Only two European wars have ever been thus made subject of special notice. No proclamation was issued by the United States during the Chinese war.

Numerous applications are being made to the State Department for assistance to procure positions in branches of the Russian military service. The Department can render no such assistance.

CARDINAL CULLEN ON THE WAR.

Cardinal Cullen, in a pastoral to his clergy, which was ready in the Dublin chapel, says that it is not the business to undertake the defence of the Turks, who have acted so barbarously towards the Christians of late years, of the Russians, who, with a skill worth of Julian the Apostate, in his hatred of the true religion, have carried on a cruel and destructive persecution for so many years against the Poles. If Russia allowed to take possession of Constantinople and of Turkish provinces, there every danger that, under her influence Cossack barbarity will be widely spread that Governments will become despotic that individual and family liberty will be destroyed, and God's Church placed in great jeopardy.

RUS-IA.

The Commander of Sebastopol has ordered civilians to quit that city, as an attack is expected.

The Mohammedan insurrection is increasing. Troops left St. Petersburg to quell the revolt.

The Russian army on the Danube will be increased to eight army corps, aggregating 280,000 men.

A Bucharest despatch says that Russians will cross the Danube June 10th.

The Russians lost 300 killed and wounded in a skirmish near Kurs.

The Turks confine their preparation to strengthening the Danubian fortress. All these are being made more or less formidable, but strengthening their garrisons detracts from the numbers of field force. With all the reinforcements recently brought up, the Turks have more than 200,000 combatants north of the Balkans to resist 250,000 Russians.

The Czar will make Bucharest his headquarters, till the end of the war.

THE EXPRESS.

NAPANEE, JUNE, 1st 1877.

THE HOPES OF THE REACTIONISTS.

The Tory sheets throughout the country have been indicating—some with more or less vagueness, and some with a prophetic soul worthy of the astuteness of political HAMLETS—the probability of speedy recurrence of a general election.

Some of them attribute to Mr. Mackenzie the intention of shoving the election upon the country before the opposition is prepared to fight out the contest, with a result justifying the predictions of reaction that every newspaper SOLOX of the true blue has been enunciating every time some insignificant borough or riding has seen fit to change its representation from Grit to Tory.

No matter whether little local differences and influences ruled the result, still it was a genuine "reaction" and the fate of the ministry of the day was sealed. The sealing process has been going on for the last two years, and still the MacKenzie administration sit too firmly in their seats to be solicitous concerning the security of the tenure of their portfolios. The very solicitude of the opposition party. The suspicious imputations of unfair delays to Mr. MacKENZIE and his colleagues, show plainly how they favour the result of a general election.

On every side they are making the most strenuous and unscrupulous efforts to place their party in a position to make victory for their side possible.

They are organizing in every part of the country, even the good old County of Lennox has a band of faithful spirits, a choice litter and coterie of congenial spirits who fill the promptings of ambition, who are urged on by irrepressible motions of loyalty and patriotic devotion to add another unit to the ranks of the country's saviours, to add another star, albeit it may prove to be only a satellite,

at this morning, a wonder of tattooing on the person of Capt. George Costentenus, a descendant of a noble Greek family, from the province of Albania. This statement is that while he, together with an American and a Spaniard, were among in Chinese Tartary, in 1867 a rebellion arose, and the three joined the insurgents. Ill luck coming to their cause, they were taken prisoners, and subjected to the tattooing process for three months, as a punishment in lieu of having their heads cut off. He says that the process causes such terrible pain that it required six men to hold him while one performed the operation. After it was completed all three escaped from prison, but the American only survived five or six months. The Spaniard lost his eyesight, and died in Morilla; but Capt. Costentenus survives and is in good health. The tattooing was done with indigo and cinnabar, producing blue and red colors; and there is not a single point on his body which is not covered with these colors, so that it is impossible to discover what was the natural color of his skin except by his ears and the soles of his feet, which are the only parts they did not tattoo. He appeared at first sight as though he was clothed with very close-fitting tights, made of a shawl or very soft, fine drugget. Upon a close inspection, however, it is seen that he is entirely naked, and that the apparent tights are an illusion. Moreover, his whole person is found to be covered with a great variety of animal figures, with their names, most ingeniously and skillfully printed into the cuticle. On the forehead are animals and inscriptions, and on the face star-like figures. On the hands are numerous red points and fingers resembling sculptures, as well as long-tailed panther-like shapes. On the neck, chest, abdomen, back, and extremities, the skin is a mass of symmetrically arranged and admirably executed figures of monkeys, tigers, lions, elephants, peacocks, storks, swans, snakes, crocodiles, lizards, mingled with bows, arrows, leaves, flowers, and fruit; on the palms of the hands are indescribable figures, and little figures on the inside of the fingers. On the back and sides of both feet to the toes are blue points, and from the toes to the nails red lines. Altogether, there are 388 tattooed pictures on the entire body—on the forehead, 2; neck, 1; chest, 50; back, 37; abdomen, 52; upper extremities, 101; lower extremities, 137. He is certainly one of the greatest human curiosities ever seen. He has traveled in all countries except America, and is attracted here by the Centennial Exhibition. He spoke English, French, Spanish, and Italian, this morning, and he understands the Arabic, Persian and several other languages. He is about five feet high, has a superb physique; his hair is straight jet black, and glossy. To the touch his skin has a very soft velvet feeling; and it has so much the appearance of being clothed, that he might walk through the public streets without anyone suspecting that he was not dressed in tights."

Austin Humphrey, who murdered Frederick Appel at Windsor in February 1st, suffered the extreme penalty of the law by hanging the morning of the 22nd ult., at Sandwich, near Windsor. The following is his dying speech:—"My dear friends—I am now on the scaffold to pay the last penalty of the law, and I bless God that he has seen fit to pardon me and wash away my sins. I feel that my sentence is just, and I want to warn you all, my dear friends, never, never touch the intoxicating cup. It was all through liquor that I came here. Oh! my friends, as you value your own souls leave that cup alone. It has done more harm than all other things put together, and has been the ruin of thousands as it has been of me. May God have mercy upon me and give me grace."

Russia intends to increase the duty on imported cocaine, which now yields about 10,000,000 roubles yearly, sufficiently to increase the yield several millions. Simultaneously the tax on Russian growth will be reduced to encourage home cultivation.

It is officially announced that the Emperor has recalled Bismarck to consider the situation in France, and the probable effect of the change of Ministry upon the relations of France and Germany, important resolutions regarding the future policy of Germany towards France will be adopted.

Prosecutions have been instituted against the provincial papers La Marseillaise and Paris for insulting MacMahon.

Signor Rizzi, Chief Inspector of Police at Lercara Italy, showed much firmness against the brigands at the time of the capture of the English subject, Mr. Rose. On the night of the 15th inst., Signor Rizzi's house was destroyed by an explosion of gunpowder. Himself, his wife, and two sons escaped alive, though severely burnt. The house had been secretly undermined.

Some of the Spanish papers are advocating the aggression of the bull fights, and are publishing an eloquent appeal to the Cortes asking that it may be declared illegal to allow horses to take part in them. There are one hundred bull rings in Spain and only twelve savings banks. Several of the towns which have recently built rings have no schools.

Ireland's contribution to the Papal Jubilee fund amounts to over $100,000. England has contributed $173,000.

The Czar is about to assume command of the army of the Danube. He will be accompanied by nearly all the Grand Dukes of the Imperial family not already in the field.

The Russians are mobilizing a reserve of 150,000 Cossacks of the Don, and others which has already engaged in operations, and twenty-one batteries of active army.

The town of Andan, which is situated in a valley, and is surrounded by the Russian post which is being fortified, is set on fire. It is 50 miles from Kars. Andan is a place of great natural importance, being situated between two important channels, on one side being the Taurus, the other from the east. It possesses a great valley as far as the Russian frontier, where the way is barred by Makhtar Pasha's forces, which had a chain of posts by which they maintain communication with Kars. The fall of Andan will enable the Russian army which invested it to cause a diversion that may lead to the speedy surrender of that city.

Even old Lennox is buckling on her armor to redeem the riding from the meubans of the Hon. R. J. Cartwright, to haul the Finance Minister from his seat and give his place to—well we won't say who—for he faithful of the party of gentlemen, have not yet found a victim sufficiently pliant to consent to immolate himself on the altar—foolhardy enough to undertake to contest the riding, with the Hon. R. J. Cartwright.

It is well enough for them to talk glibly of his incapacity, of his extravagant administration of financial affairs of the country, but where will they find a man in the County of Lennox that will stand the ghost of a chance against him in an election? where will they ever find a man in Lennox, who will take a seat in the House of Commons, and go through the mere mechanical process of voting with as much credit, and success as has marked the efforts of the present Minister of Finance, controlling and managing the financial affairs of the first colony of the British Empire. On Sunday night disguised men went to Bardville, Ky., gaol, seized the negro prisoner Levi Pile, who attempted to order Mrs. Pile, wife of his employer, a week, and dragged him to the woods, where they hung him.

An illicit distillery on Newtown Creek was broken up last night and 8,000 gallons of mash and thirteen hogheads of clams seized by United States officers. Proceedings have been commenced in English courts on behalf of a number of residents of New York and Long Island to recover, as heirs at law, $12,000 in money. It seems that in 10 Robert Shepherd deposited in the Bank of England a million pounds to the use of his sister, who had married him in England and gone to Canada. An advertisement appeared, informing the heirs of Robert and his sister that this money which, it is now estimated, has accumulated to thirteen million dollars. Altogether about eleven persons in this country lay a claim to a share in the money. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has reduced the salaries of all the employees 10 per cent except labourers and children.

THE WAR NEWS.

MASSACRE OF CHRISTIANS BY TURKS.

In the Turkish village of Turtukai there is quite a Christian element, though subordinate in numbers to the Turks. On the night of the 16th ult., the latter made a concerted and general attack upon the Christians. Scenes of frightful atrocity took place. The males were put indiscriminately to the sword; many of the elder women shared the same fate, and the younger were brutally outraged. The account given by two Bulgarians who escaped from the town of the outrage and murder of old and young is horrible beyond measure. (The above although contradicted at the time, is now after most careful enquiry, officially confirmed.)

AMERICAN NEUTRALITY—WAR MATERIAL.

Within a short time the Russian Government has loaded three vessels with war material at New York, one of them sailed at the same time as the vessels of the Russian squadron, and who are to convey her. Each vessel carried 200 tons of brass metal, three to five millions cartridges, and 5,000 barrels gunpowder. Up to the present 200,000 pistols have been shipped to Russia. Another vessel with war munitions for Turkey will sail in July.

There seems little probability of a neutrality proclamation being issued by our Government. Only two European wars have ever been thus made subjects of special notice. No proclamation was issued by the United States during the Chinese war.

Numerous applications are being made to the State Department for assistance to procure positions in branches of the Russian military service. The Department can render no such assistance.

CARDINAL CULLEN ON THE WAR.

Cardinal Cullen, in a pastoral to his clergy, which was ready in the Dublin chapel, says that it is not their business to undertake the defence of the Turks, who have acted so barbarously towards the Christians of late years, or of the Russians, who, with a skill worthy of Julian the Apostate, in his hatred of the true religion, have carried on a cruel and destructive persecution for so many years against the Poles. If Russia be allowed to take possession of Constantinople and of Turkish provinces, there is every danger that, under her influence, Cossack barbarity will be widely spread, that Governments will become despotic, that individual and family liberty will be destroyed, and God's Church placed in great jeopardy.

RUSSIA.

The Commander of Sebastopol has ordered civilians to quit that city, as an attack is expected.

The Mohammedan insurrection is increasing. Troops left St. Petersburg to quell the revolt.

The Russian army on the Danube will be increased to eight army corps, aggregating 240,000 men.

A Bucharest despatch says the Russians will cross the Danube June 10th.

The Russians lost 300 killed and wounded in a skirmish near Kars.

The Turks confine their preparations to strengthening the Danubian fortresses. All these are being made more or less formidable, but strengthening their garrisons detracts from the numbers of field force. With all the reinforcements recently brought up, the Turks have no more than 200,000 combatants north of the Balkans to resist 250,000 Russians.

The Czar will make Bucharest his headquarters, till the end of the war.

Seven hundred Jews have been de-

ENGLAND.

Colonel F. Wellesley, British military attaché at St. Petersburg, has been refused his request to accompany the Russians to the seat of war.

The Duchess Marie of Edinburgh has been attending a special service held for the success of the Russian army now in the field against Turkey. In the event of any unforeseen contingency arising out of the present hostilities the Duchess will remain in England.

Thousands of barrels of powder will be embarked for Malta on Wednesday.

It is believed in London that Russia and England have agreed upon localizing the war; also upon the question of the navigation of the Suez Canal.

Iskender Khan, a newhew of the Emir of Afghanistan, who has been sojourning for some time in London, has gone to Constantinople to offer his services to the Sultan.

THE NORTH-WEST.

The Mennonite emigration to Manitoba will be limited this year, as it is only known positively of forty families who are coming. Owing to the Russia-Turkish war, the Mennonites cannot sell their property at home at present without a great sacrifice, which of course they decline to do. When the war is over, and property can be sold for fair prices, doubtless there will be a large movement Manitobawards.

WINNIPEG, May 24.—The Queen's Birthday was celebrated here by a universal holiday, races in several parts of the Province, and garrison sports at Winnipeg, etc.

Official news has been received here that the garrison will not be maintained after August.

The City Council appointed a Committee to consider what steps should be taken to provide temporary lodging for the many emigrants who are arriving, all the hotels and boarding houses and the emigrant shed being full. The Committee suggests the erection of tents, or accommodation in the unoccupied barracks to be furnished by the military authorities or a large temporary shed could be erected.

WINNIPEG, May 25.—Six children of Hudson Bay Company's employees at the Lower Fort were nightfallly burnt yesterday by the partial explosion of a keg of damaged gunpowder with which they were playing. Five children are dead. Two men and one other child are hourly expected to die. The Hudson's Bay Company's influence prevents an inquest being held.

The Dominion Government has granted $25,000 to assist the Icelanders.

Smallpox is now extinct at Gualti. The people are settling on their own allotments and putting in crops.

The officers of the Winnipeg Field Battery, in preparation for Lord Dufferin's visit, have sent to England a cash order for fifty new regulation military helmets. He expects the first batch in August.

PACER.
Bacon's Ethan Allen was sired by Old Ethan Allen, out of Black Hawk, by Sherman, by Justice Morgan, by True Britton, an imported horse from England.
Ethan Allen's dam was by Watkins' Highlander, by Young Messenger by Impertinent Messenger. The dam of Watkins' Highlander was a running mare known as Nancy, brought from Kentucky. Highlander was the sire of the first Kentucky hunter: Grandfire of Flora Temple, Edwin First and many other noted horses. The dam of Bacon's Ethan Allen was a mare of great beauty, speed and endurance, dark bay, with high full mane and tail, she was mother of Pathfinder, a noted Stallion owned by Geo. Benedict of Oneida Co., N. Y. she was also dam to Andrew Jackson, Green Mountain Morgan and Black Hawk Jr., and Topsy.
No Stock in the State of New York stands higher than this.

This horse took the 1st Premium at the National Horse Fair at Watertown for the Best Stallion, also, for the best hands of Colts from Exhibition. The Stallion is one of the best gaited horses in the world, and is considered by good judges to be one of the best stock horses in the State of New York. Also, 1st Premium at the Midland Central Fair, Kingston, 1876.

The following horses were sired by him:
Continental, sold for $4,500, at four year old - the present owners have refused $12,000. The Pulver Colt was sold for $1,500. "Lew Ives" The Rogers' Colt, sold for $3,500. Martin's pair of 3 years old Colts sold for $1,700, and afterwards one of them sold for $3,000. The Kellogg Colt, at 1 years, sold for $2,800. Bonner paid for "Peachblow", half sister of Ethan Allen, $12,000. Fie's Mare "Venus" at three years old sold for $5,000, and afterwards her owner refused $85,000. Rufus White four years old, 3 heats under 2:30, half mile in 1:12. Colonel Clark's horse, sold for $1,000. The Gregg Colt. Tom Allen, Aikens' Matched Colts, four and five years, sold last fall for $2,100. Bruce of Watertown, sold his 5 year old mare for $1,000. Hod Howes gelding, New York, 10 hands high, shows a better than a 30 gait. Terry Mare, Hartford, Conn. sold for $4,000. Henry Averell, Adams, sold a 4 year old Colt for $6,000.

This horse is half-brother to the following horses:-

Holspur, whose record is 2:22; Wm. R. Whitman, 2:23; Harry Allen, 2:27; Le Bloude, 2:27; Peachblow, owned by Mr. Bonner, 2:18; Rippon Boy, 2:28; Honest Allen, 2:21, and with running mate, 2:17; Warwick, 2:23-1/2; Major Allen, 2:24; Nonsuch, 2:25; Comet, 2:27; Hickory Jack, 2:29; Daniel Lumber, Billy Barr, 2:23; Fanny Lee, 2:21; Warwick, 2:25; Washington Tenny, 2:25.

WILL BE AT THE ALBION HOTEL, KINGSTON.

During the Season of 1877, excepting from Tuesday at 4 p.m. until Friday Noon. Commencing on the 15th of May, leaving for Picton on Tuesday at 4 p.m. returning Friday Noon each week.

TERMS: -25 to insure 85 down on first service, and $20 on the 1st day of April, 1878.

This Horse has taken the 1st premium as a Stock horse for more than ten years in Jefferson County, New York.

Canal Enlargement.

Notice to Contractors.

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the undersigned, and endorsed "Tenders for the Welland Canal", will be received at this office until the arrival of the Eastern and Western mails on THURSDAY, the 30th day of May next, for the formation of a new line of canal from Marlatt's Pond, at Thorold, to Allanburg, including the construction of a hit lock, guard lock, several culverts and piers and abutments for swing bridges, &c.

Also, the enlargement of about two miles of the canal, from the Junction downward, together with the construction of an Aqueduct over the hippawa River, a lock between the canal and the river at Welland, piers and abutments for bridges, &c.

And, the enlargement of the canal from Ramsey's Bend to Port Colborne, including the construction of a guard lock, weir, and supply race, &c.

The works will be let in sections of a length suited to circumstances, and the locality.

Maps of the different localities, together with plans and specifications of the works can be seen at this office on and after MONDAY, the 25th day of June next, where printed forms of tender can be obtained. A like class of information relative to the works north of Allanburg, can be seen at the resident Engineer's office, THOROLD; and for works south of Port Robinson, plans, &c. may be seen at the resident Engineer's office, WELLAND.

Contractors are requested to bear in mind that Tenders will not be considered unless made strictly in accordance with the printed forms, and—in the case of firms—except there are attached the actual signatures, the nature of the occupation and place of residence of each member of the same; and further, an accepted bank cheque or other available security for the sum of one to five thousand dollars, according to the extent of work on the section, must accompany each Tender, which sum shall be forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the works at the rates stated in the offer submitted.

The amount required in each case will be stated on the form of Tender.

The cheque or money thus sent in will be returned to the respective contractors whose Tenders are not accepted.

For the due fulfilment of the contract, satisfactory security will be required, by the deposit of money to the amount of five per cent. on the bulk sum of the contract of which the sum sent in with the Tender will be considered a part.

Ninety per cent only of the progress estimates will be paid until the completion of the work. To each Tender must be attached the actual signatures of two responsible solvent persons, residents of the Dominion, willing to become sureties for the carrying out of these conditions as well as the due performance of the works engaged in the contract.

This Department does not, however, bind itself to accept the lowest or any Tender.

By order, F. BRAUN, Secretary. DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS, OTTAWA, 14th May, 1877. No-53in.

This fine yacht leaves on her first trip, on Monday evening, with a crowd of pleasure seekers for Barnum's show in Belleville. From thence she goes to Toronto, returning by the way of Ogdensburg, and touching at several intermediate ports.

Academy Athletic Association.

The first public competition will take place on the Academy grounds to-morrow, at 1 o'clock p.m. Rev. J. J. Bogart, Judge Wilkison, and Messrs. Geddes and Morden, will act as judges, Mr. T. Trimble, starter, and W. Tilley, time-keeper. Jumping, running, putting weights, steeple chase, and gymnastic exercises on horizontal and parallel bars, ladder, trapeze, etc. Entries to be made before 5 p.m. to-day (Friday). The prizes will be distributed in the Academy after the games. Ladies and gents invited, (particularly the ladies)—that is, if they wish to see how Charles Augustus has been developing his biceps.

Timely Advice—Pickpockets.

An organized gang of pickpockets follows in the wake of Barnum's show. In Watertown they reaped a rich harvest, empty pocket-books were found all over the city. In the first place don't miss the show, secondly, you go to see Barnum, not to exhibit yourself with a huge watch-chain, etc., otherwise you could engage with P. T., who would, perhaps, place you in the monkey cage, or side by side with the tattooed foreigner or zebra, and then invidious comparisons would be made by those rascally Darwinians, which would be extremely odious. We accordingly advise you, Almira Jane, to leave that "oriseid" chain and locket at home, and Charles Henry had better deposit his family time-piece and pocket-book with his mother, for safe keeping, or some heartless "professional" will relieve him of his surplus wealth, as easily as a snail crawls over a cabbage leaf on a dewy morning.

Pringle Bros.—Cemetery Fencing.

We had occasion to examine a very creditable specimen of ornamental iron fencing, manufactured by the above firm for Messrs. Fraser & Madden, and recently erected in our cemetery. Pringle Bros. supply a host of designs to choose from, and if necessary, get up special patterns to suit the taste and purse of any customer. Their facilities in regard to machinery enable them to execute successfully in this respect, and parties who have been in the habit of ordering from a distance, can now save the attendant delay, freightage &c., besides having work done under their own supervision, by fostering home industry. Mr. Byrnes said he only wanted justice and would appeal to the Judge.

G. B. SILL'S APPEAL.

Mr. Sills appealed against the assessment of the office on Dundas st. occupied by him, on the ground that it was occupied by him as an officer of the Dominion Government.

The Clerk said that Mr. Sills was assessed for $1250 as a tenant of Mr. Wm. Miller.

Moved by Mr. James, sec. by Mr. Lane, that the assessment be struck out.—Carried.

G. W. HUMPHREY'S APPEAL.

Mr. Humphrey appealed against his assessment for a bitch. He had sold her, and at the time of the assessment she had returned home from Shannonville. He had a dog now—Assessed for a dog instead.

J. N. LAPUM'S APPEAL.

Mr. Lapum appealed for a reduction on his property on Dundas st., opposite Herrin's implement works. It was assessed for $1,100 which he considered too high, and asked that it be made $900.

Mr. Roe said he thought $1,100 was too much. He moved that $1,100 be struck out and $1,000 inserted instead. Mr. McNeill seconded the motion which was carried.

C. Z. PERRY'S APPEAL.

Mr. Perry appealed to have D. Perry's name inserted as tenant of his instead of the name of A. F. Shorts. Alteration ordered.

R. MATHESON'S APPEAL.

Mr. Matheson appealed against an assessment of $600 for income. He said that the assessment for income should be upon that of the previous year, and not of the current year which was not yet earned and could not be assessed. He had an income last year of $500 only, having been employed a good part of the year in St. Catharines closing up his business—Reduced from $600 to $100

JOHN SOBY'S APPEAL.

Mr. Soby put in three appeals: (1), to have Potter Bro's name inserted instead of his as tenant of Buico House, (2), to have his name inserted as tenant of Lot 14, south side Bridge street, and (3) to have Potter Bro's name inserted as tenants of part east side East st. instead of his. Mr. Potter consented to the change and it was, on motion, ordered that Mr. Soby's name be struck out and S. J. Potter inserted instead. Mr. Boyle consented to have his name struck out as tenant of No. 14 South side Bridge street, and John Soby's inserted instead, and it was accordingly so ordered. Mr. Boyle was put on as tenant of W. Miller.

FERGUSON BRO'S APPEAL.

Mr. Wm. Ferguson appeared on half of the firm and asked that their name be struck out as tenant of No. 9 south side Dundas st. They had spoken to Mr. Webster and he agreed that they should not be assessed. Their lease expired on the 14th April and at 7 p.m. on the 13th they tendered Mr. Waller the keys and rent, and after that, on the same evening, were assessed for the property as the lease expired at midnight of that day after the tender, they were not tenants and should not be assessed.

Mr. Gibbs appeared for Mr. Waller and said that the only question was as to whether or not they were tenants, and if they were the assessment should not be changed as it was right. He held that they were in possession until the close of the 14th, and having been assessed on the 13th it was just and should not be changed.

Mr. Webster said that on the 9th of April when assessing on Dundas st.

About two years ago the trustees of school in the county of Victoria, a new teacher. Among the school there happened to be a rather clever attractive girl of thirteen years of age whom Sheppard soon fastened an eye To accomplish his purpose poor girl was specially praised and added to her parents as capable of much more than was possible during ordinary school hours. She was spending extra labour upon, and a teacher professed that if the parents furnish the extra books, he was willing to give the needed instruction (school hours). Bob Kennedy Arrested.

The notorious Sandy McDaff, known in Belleville and Napanee as Bob Kennedy, was arrested at Price's Corners on Friday last by constable Abbott, of Orillia, on a charge of attempting to shoot Mr. Daragh, proprietor of the hotel at Price's. He was brought before Mayor Miller and Mr. Alport, J. P., at Orillia on Saturday, and committed to jail to await his trial at the next Assizes.

Our Railway Bridge.

Thorne Bull never does things by halves, when he comes to the stability of our railway bridge, said to be one of the best on the line. An employee of the company has been engaged in pointing the whole structure, which was much needed. It improves the appearance and adds to the stability, so that now, timid travellers will have no fears of an Ashtabula disaster, every stone is as firm as when the first regular train passed over twenty-one years ago.

Caution to Emigrants.

Persons starting for Manitoba should be cautioned in purchasing assignments of half-breed miners claims in Winnipeg such assignments being of unquestionable legality, and often made to several different persons. This caution is intended to apply to scrip or volunteer bounty warrants which carry their genuineness on their face. Many of the assignments before referred to, are uttered in the wake of Barnum's show. In Watertown they reaped a rich harvest, empty pocket-books were found all over the city. In the first place don't miss the show, secondly, you go to see Barnum, not to exhibit yourself with a huge watch-chain, etc., otherwise you could engage with P. T., who would, perhaps, place you in the monkey cage, or side by side with the tattooed foreigner or zebra, and then invidious comparisons would be made by those rascally Darwinians, which would be extremely odious. We accordingly advise you, Almira Jane, to leave that "oriseid" chain and booklet at home, and Charles Henry had better deposit his family time-piece and pocket-book with his mother, for safe keeping, or some heartless "professional" will relieve him of his surplus wealth, as easily as a snail crawls over a cabbage leaf on a dewy morning.

One old lady was found reading her bible, and some of the children were studying their lessons, like any well-regulated family, while cooking, washing, etc., with portable stoves and camp-kettles, was in progress throughout the camp. A number of well made canvas-covered waggons were nicely painted and somewhat tastefully fitted with doors and windows, while inside were separate sleeping apartments, ornamented with pictures, mirrors &c., the whole rig costing from two to five hundred dollars, and upwards. On week days, the men drove into town to engage in horse trading, generally getting the best of a bargain, while the women were as successful in peddling tinware. Hard Times in Nevada.

Correspondence from Nevada represents a terrible state of affairs. A writer says:—Men who but three months since supposed they were rich, are to-begging for employment; and probably three persons out of every four are making their first acquaintance with extreme poverty. The whole community seems to be beggared, and to add to affliction we have just passed through great drought; our cattle are dying the hundreds of thousands. Their cases cannot be sold for any sum, however small; and the ruin of the cattle dealers will inevitably bring a great deal of the land now held in masses into market to be sold for a song. Poor East, who have money, could not better that to come out here in order to take advantage of the reckless way in which all kinds of property are sold. Valuable farms and ranches can now had for one-twentieth of their value, city property is for sale at prices which would have seemed ridiculous a few years ago. Southern California is described as an "ash heap," while the Sonora Sacramento, and Sonora Valleys burned by a crisp for want of rain.

EMIGRATION TO CANADA.

The Belfast News thinks it is plain from the recent debate in the Dominion Parliament on the immigration estimate that hon. members generally have begun to see that the immigration agency business has been overdone, in so far as sweeping into the million thousands of people who were wanted, and who are now a burden to colony and to themselves, flying over there and anywhere from misery and hardship. The report of the Minister of Agriculture, says the News, shows that last year the Government spent $1,405 assisting 1,761 indigent immigrants, while during the year 1873 the expenditure was $2,000 for assisting 8,000 indigent immigrants. We thought, judging from the flashy announcements in the literature the walls, that there was room enough and work enough for all who might come from Ireland or any other part

Our Railway Bridge.
The bridge over the river by which the Napanee and Orillia roads are connected, is one of the best on the line. An employee of the company has been engaged in painting the whole structure, which was much needed. It improves the appearance and adds to the stability, so that now, timber travelers will have no fears of an Astoria disaster, every one is as safe as when the first regular train passed over twenty-one years ago.

Caution to Emigrants.
Persons starting for Manitoba should be cautioned in purchasing assignments of half-breed miners' claims. In Winnipeg such assignments being of unquestionable legality, and often made to several different persons. This caution is not intended to imply that the volunteer county warrants which carry their genuineness on their face. Many of the assignments before referred to, are utterly valueless, and some of the emigrants arriving have been heartlessly scolded.

Dunkin in Prince Edward.
The Pictou New Nation denies the report that the liquor traffic in Prince Edward goes on about as it did before the Dunkin Act came in force, and "says it is a palpable falsehood to bolster up a real cause. To state that the traffic goes on about as it did before the Act came into force, is stating what every man, woman, and child in Pictou knows to be false. If the traffic did go on as before, neither Licensed Victuallers nor the Police would have a word to say about it. But it is because the traffic is curtailed to a minimum, and driven to secrecy and darkness, that an attempt is made to fasten it upon the law."

Napanee Victorious.
It is gratifying to note the success which attended the Napanee Cricket and Base Ball Clubs on the 24th. The former at Massasaqua Point, beat the Belleville Club by 1, with 4 wickets to go down. The Silver Leaf Base Ball Club beat the Clippers of Belleville on the latter's ground, by a score of 62 to 32. Our base ballists speak very highly of the hospitable manner in which they were entertained by their opponents, who seemed to "study to please" and win and dined the victors, besides showing them around, and otherwise doing the agreeable, a fact which will not be forgotten by our boys at the return match, in Napanee on Monday next, the 1th of June.

Liberal-Conservative Gathering.
A Liberal-Conservative association for Lennox was formed on the 24th in the Town Hall. The meeting was organized by the appointment of Mr. M. W. Prunty as chairman. Mr. W. N. Dollar, Warlen of the County, was proposed by Mr. J. T. Grange, M.P.P., and unanimously elected President. The following Vice-Presidents were then chosen: Messrs. E. Storr and P. W. Dube, Reeve and Deputy Reeves of Richmond; Chas. Lloyd, of North Fredericksburgh; Ira Han, Reeve of South Fredericksburgh; Parker Allen, of Adolphustown; D. Preston, of Amherst Island; T. E. Howard, of Bath; E. Hooper, County Treasurer, and M. W. Prunty, of Napanee. Mr. G. M. Elliott, of the Standard, was chosen Secretary, and Mr. Chas. Fraser, of Ernestown, Treasurer. Committee for each municipality were appointed, and arrangements completed for a canvass in every school section.

Barnum's Advance Brigade.
A special railway car carrying Mr. Barnum's paste brigade recently passed through Napanee on its way westward. The car in question is a magnificent one, and admirably adapted for the purpose for which it is used. It was formerly a Boston and Albany mail car, and last year was bought by the great showman, for use as an advertising car. The exterior is beautifully painted, the centre figure being a life-like portrait of the famed Plincaus, with surroundings of animals from the various parks of the world, which have been collected together by the remarkable man named for the instruction and delight of the public generally. The interior is fitted up in an elegant manner, being a sort of "travelling hotel," there being twelve sleeping berths, and a private parlor for the advance business agent, in which he does his necessary writing. The kitchen for the manufacture of paste for the brigade, is well adapted for the purpose; while the cases for the paper will hold sufficient for from four to six weeks' steady work on the road. There is a room for the paste cans, brushes, etc., while they even have a wash-bowl with them. Barnum never does things by halves, and this car is an exemplification of the fact. Mr. J. H. Breeze, the boss bill-poster of America, is in the command of the brigade, which is an efficient one. Mr. Stowe, the press agent, travels in the car, and he also is a gentleman who thoroughly understands every department of his business.

COURT OF REVISION.
The Court of Revision for the town of Napanee met and organized on Monday. Present: Messrs. Herring (chairman), Lane, McNeill, James and Roe. They took the prescribed oath, and the Court proceeded to business. The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

DANIEL BYRNES' APPEAL.
Mr. Daniel Byrnes of Hungerford, appealed against the assessment of lots Nos. 21, 22 and 23 on the West side of Robert st.
Mr. McNeill said Mr. Byrnes had not given a regular notice of appeal because he had not received a bill of his assessment. He supposed it was his (McNeill's) fault. He thought the assessment was too high, as his lots were assessed at $200 each, while those around him were only assessed for from $100 to $150. He moved that the assessment on Lots 21, 22, 23, be reduced to $150 each.
The Clerk stated that Mr. Byrnes was assessed for Lots 21, 22 and 23, at $200 each, and for 26 on the same street for $100 or $700 in all.
Mr. Byrnes said he bought the lots three years ago, when the town was prosperous, at the same rate as the intervening lots (24 and 25). He was assessed at $200 per lot and the others at $100. He had never got a bill of assessment, but never failed to get a bill of taxes. He would at any time sell the lots for the assessment. In reply to Mr. Roe he said he would not take any less. The lots had cost him $225 each.
Mr. Roe said that if he would take no less for the lots the assessment was just right.
Mr. Webster produced a map to show the position of the lots, and reference to the Assessment roll, showed that the lots on the East side of Robert st. were assessed for the same amounts.

J. H. WAGAR'S APPEAL.
Mr. McNeill presented an appeal from Mr. Wagar to be assessed as tenant of Alfred Wagar, Clarksville. It was found that would destroy both votes, and as they used the same door as entrance and exit, the appeal was dismissed.

W. McCALLUM'S APPEAL.
Mr. McCallum asked to have his son, T. J. McCallum assessed jointly with him, as owner. Moved by Mr. Roe, see, by Mr. James, that the appeal be granted. Carried.

It was then moved and second that the Roll as amended be passed, and the motion having carried, the court adjourned.

FLINTON.

Mr. Barron: The people here are evidently determined to be somebody, and are showing as bold a front as the front cities and towns of the front, notwithstanding the fact that this place is called (by the vulgar only, of course) a back settlement.

If you had been here last Friday night you would, doubtless, have thought we had declared war with somebody, to see the numerous martial-looking gents strewn about in different directions, and large numbers of men all around with long poles, and as evening set in, the great camp fires lit up the field of tents, and the sturdy men, not as might be supposed, in training for a European war, but engaged in the art of peace and honest industry. The last batch of the 10,000 bays was being floated the falls, 19,000 still being left in Wolf Lake till the spring of next year.

Saturday last ushered in the commencement of a grand field day among the travelling Catholics of this vicinity, and considering the numerous splendid turnouts of baggies, democrats' wagons, phaetons, &c., &c., anyone with half an eye would see somebody was about to appear of no ordinary importance, and such was the case. The Right Rev. Bishop De O'Brien of Kingston was on his way, and like the passage of the bride and bridegroom of scripture, they were going forth to meet him, but unlike the wise and foolish virgins, they did not wait long enough, however a little before midnight, the great chief and his staff arrived.

Sunday was a busy day and early in the morning, about 9:30, the popular bishop was in the midst of his flock, they having welcomed him upon their knees. The staff consisted of the strait-forward John Bull-like McDonough, priest of the parish, also the Rev. Vicar Genl. Farley of Belleville, whose chief business seemed to be to look after the cash box, which he did with as good ability as ever Tetzel (pretentive prinitatis inquisitor) did while selling indulgences in the days of Luther. Then came the sober-looking tall Dr. Chisholme of Perth, this Dr. wears a venerable beard, so immense is the priesthood.

The services of the day commenced with the consecration of the church. The Bishop appearing in full costume (I suppose his mitre, gold chain and purple coat reaching to his boots, and over all his beautiful embroidered white lace gown.

An explanation to the people by V. G. Farley as to their need of money to pay off a large debt on the Bishops' palace at Kingston followed, and every one of the faithful (and unfaithful too) was visited by the indefatigable Vicar-Genl., accompanied by several trustees of the church, and by the time all had been visited, about $80 (credit and cash) had exchanged owners, next followed Mass by Dr. Chisholme and confirmation of about thirty, mostly young folks, by the Bishop. In the afternoon the grave-yard was consecrated, and after the ceremony, addresses in English by Dr. Chisholme and French by the Bishop, reminding the flock of their duty to pray for the souls of the departed, that they by their prayers might be assisted and delivered

We thought, judging from the flashy announcements in the literature of the walls, that there was room enough and work enough for all who might emigrate from Ireland, or any other part of the world to Canada; but Mr. Pope says that last year "1,761 indigent immigrants" were relieved, and four years ago, before anything was heard about the misery to which thousands of our credulous countrymen had become a prey, 8,000 indigent immigrants were on the relief list! We may form some idea from these facts of the condition of the immigrants who have lately been arriving in Canada. Mr. Monteith declared that it was a gross mistake to have agents in Europe to pick up on the streets in the cities any classes they could get hold of, and send them out to the Dominion. It is a gross mistake to have them in Ireland as numerous as they have been; and we may be permitted to inform the Dominion House of Commons that it the agents who may not be required in this country for some years to come, would return to the Dominion, whose prayers they have been singing, the people might have more faith in their statements, and immigration would improve sooner than will otherwise be the case.

THE RIGHT OF SEARCH.

(Washington Correspondence.)

As there is much comment in regard to the probability of the Russian fleet which left New York, going to sea for the purpose of inspecting vessels suspected of having arms and munitions of war on board, it may be proper to state that, according to our treaties with France, Prussia, Brazil, Sweden, the Netherlands, United States of Columbia, Spain, Holland and several other nations, the examining vessels shall remain out of gun-shot of the vessel to be searched, and send small boats to board the vessel suspected.

The proof of regularity with respect to the cargo must be certificates containing particulars of the cargo, place sailed from, where bound, &c., but the hatches are not to be opened, nor any of the packages, unless the vessel is brought ashore, and then in the presence of competent officers. The master of any suspected vessels cannot be required to leave his ship. Our treaty with Great Britain and Russia are silent as to the whole proceeding. Under the treaties with the other nations, first mentioned, everything is left to depend upon the honesty of the ship's papers. Contraband goods may lie beneath every hatch, under the guise of hardware on the manifests, and cannot be examined except by the vessel of either Great Britain or Russia, which governments are not bound by the treaties above cited.

Moved by Mr. James, sec. by Mr. Lane, that the assessment be confirmed.—Carried.

Mr. Byrnes said he only wanted justice and would appeal to the Judge.

G. B. SILL'S APPEAL.

Mr. Sills appealed against the assessment of the office on Dundas st. occupied by him, on the ground that it was occupied by him as an officer of the Dominion Government.

The Clerk said that Mr. Sills was assessed for $1250 as a tenant of Mr. Wm. Miller.

Moved by Mr. James, sec. by Mr. Lane, that the assessment be struck out.—Carried.

G. W. HUMPHREY'S APPEAL.

Mr. Humphrey appealed against his assessment for a bitch. He had sold her, and at the time of the assessment she had returned home from Shannonville. He had a dog now.—Assessed for a dog instead.

J. N. LAPUM'S APPEAL.

Mr. Lapum appealed for a reduction on his property on Dundas st., opposite Herne's implement works. It was assessed for $1,100, which he considered too high, and asked that it be made $900.

Mr. Roe said he thought $1,100 was too much. He moved that $1,100 be struck out and $1,000 inserted instead. Mr. McNeill seconded the motion which was carried.

G. Z. PERRY'S APPEAL.

Mr. Perry appealed to have D. Perry's name inserted as tenant of his instead of the name of A. F. Shorts. Alteration ordered.

R. MATHESON'S APPEAL.

Mr. Matheson appealed against an assessment of $600 for income. He said that the assessment for income should be upon that of the previous year, and not of the current year, which was not yet earned and could not be assessed. He had an income last year of $500 only, having been employed a good part of the year in St. Catharines closing up his business.—Reduced from $600 to $100.

JOHN SOBY'S APPEAL.

Mr. Soby put in three appeals: (1), to have Potter Bro's name inserted instead of his as tenant of Brisco House, (2), to have his name inserted as tenant of Lot 14, south side Bridge street, and (3) to have Potter Bro's name inserted as tenants of part east side East st. instead of his. Mr. Potter consented to the change and it was, on motion, ordered that Mr. Soby's name be struck out and S. J. Potter inserted instead. Mr. Boyle consented to have his name struck out as tenant of No. 14 South side Bridge street, and John Soby's inserted instead, and it was accordingly so ordered. Mr. Boyle was put on as tenant of W. Miller.

FERGUSON BRO'S APPEAL.

Mr. Wm. Ferguson appeared on half of the firm and asked that their name be struck out as tenant of No. 9 south side Dundas st. They had spoken to Mr. Webster and he agreed that they should not be assessed. Their lease expired on the 14th April and at 7 p. m. on the 18th they tendered Mr. Waller the keys and rent, and after that, on the same evening, were assessed for the property as the lease expired at midnight of that day after the tender, they were not tenants and should not be assessed.

Mr. Gibson appeared for Mr. Waller and said that the only question was as to whether or not they were tenants, and if they were the assessment should not be changed as it was right. He held that they were in possession until the close of the 14th, and having been assessed on the 18th it was just and should not be changed.

Mr. Webster said that on the 9th of April when assessing on Dundas st. he saw Mr. Ferguson moving out of the place and passed it for the time being, but on the 18th, in the evening, Mr.

from the pains of purgatory. Lastly though perhaps not least came the lecture at 4 p. m. as advertised, he spoke for about five minutes in French, and then commenced in English, as it was Pentecost Sunday he said he would speak to his audience on "The Church." He hoped not to offend, said he tried, and had been successful in the past, in not saying anything to offend anyone. For my part I should rather that he had tried to have offended or pleased by going into a hot debatable point in their or somebody else's theology and let us have heard the worst or best of it, but no, it was as mild drawn and with the exception of about two or three points, might have passed in the Methodist pulpit. At about 4:45 all was over and we left, several feeling sorry he had not taken us into pastures new (to some of us) and over a wider range of reasoning and thought. Receipts of the day amounted to about $115 or $120, as near as could be guessed.

OBSERVER.

BEAVER LAKE.

Times have been brisk around here lately.

Several floating fields of logs have sailed through our "Medina-terra," under the management of Mr. Anderson and others, bound for their place of destination.

Mudcats are very plenty, an extraordinary haul was lately made, and which were despatched without mercy.

On the night of the 24th, Mr. J. H. Jones, was taken very sick, violent purging, and vomiting, and spasmodic contractions of the limbs, we are glad to say he is gradually getting better, but still very weak.

Seduction and its Punishment.

About two years ago the trustees of the school in the county of Victoria engaged a new teacher. Among the scholars there happened to be a rather clever and attractive girl of thirteen years of age, on whom Sheppard soon fastened an evil eye. To accomplish his purpose, the poor girl was specially praised and described to her parents as capable of doing much more than was possible during the ordinary school hours. She was worth spending extra labour upon, and so the teacher professed that if the parents would furnish the extra books, he was willing to give the needed instruction out of school hours. The snare was a transparent one, but the parents did not suspect anything, the more especially as the girl was a mere child. The books were bought, and the teaching went on in the school room after all the other children had left. The result does not need to be told. The matter came up lately before Judge Burton at Lindsay, and the miserable scamp was sentenced to pay $1,000 damages. The Judge said that it was one of the worst cases ever brought before a Court of Justice, and the lame and impotent conclusion for such an expression of opinion was a fine, which in all likelihood will never be paid. We have no hesitation in saying that for such a crime as this a fine should never be mentioned. For far less many a man has been hanged and many more are serving out life-long punishments in the penitentiary.—Globe

Hard Times in Nevada

Correspondence from Nevada represents a terrible state of affairs. One writer says:—Men who but three months since supposed they were rich, are to-day begging for employment; and probably three persons out of every four are now making their first acquaintance with extreme poverty. The whole community seems to be beggared, and to add to our affliction we have just passed through a

KNOWLEDGE IS POWER.

This is a nation of enlightened freemen. Education is the corner-stone and foundation of our government. The people are free to think and act for themselves, and that they may act wisely it is necessary that they be well informed. Every individual gain increases public gain. Upon the health of the people is based the prosperity of a nation, by it every value is increased, every joy enhanced. Health is essential to the accomplishment of every purpose; while sickness thwarts the best intentions and loftiest aims. Unto us are committed important health trusts which we hold not merely in our own behalf but for the benefit of others. In order that we may be able to discharge the obligation of our generous commission, it is necessary that we study the art of preserving health and prolonging life. It is of paramount importance to every person not only to understand the means for the preservation of health, but also to know what remedies should be employed for the alleviation of the common ailments of life. Not that we would advise every man under all circumstances to attempt to be his own physician, but we entreat him to acquire sufficient knowledge of his system and the laws that govern it, that he may be prepared to take care of himself properly, and thereby prevent sickness and prolong life. In no text book will the people find the subjects of physiology and hygiene, or the science of life and the art of preserving health, more scientifically discussed or more plainly taught than in "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," by R. V. Pierce, M. D., of Buffalo, N. Y. It is a volume of over nine hundred large pages, illustrated by over two hundred and eighty-two engravings and colored plates, is elegantly bound in cloth and gilt, and is sent, post-paid, to any address by the author at the low price of one dollar and fifty cents a copy. Nearly one hundred thousand copies have already been sold, and the present edition, which is revised and enlarged and more especially adapted to the wants of the family, is selling very rapidly. It treats of all the common diseases and their remedies, as well as of anatomy, physiology, hygiene, human temperaments, and many other topics of great interest to all people, and is truly what its author styles it, "Medicine Simplified."

Mr. Soby put in three appeals: (1), to have Potter Bro's name inserted instead of his as tenant of Brisco House, (2), to have his name inserted as tenant of Lot 1, south side Bridge street, and (3) to have Potter Bro's name inserted as tenants of part east side East st. instead of S. Mr. Potter consented to the change it was, on motion, ordered that Mr. Soby's name be struck out and S. J. Otter inserted instead. Mr. Boyle consented to have his name struck out as tenant of No. 14 South side Bridge street, and John Soby's inserted instead, and it was accordingly so ordered. Mr. Boyle was put on as tenant of W. FERGUSON BROS'S APPEAL.
Mr. Wm. Ferguson appeared on half of a firm and asked that their name be struck out as tenant of No. 9 south side Dundas st. They had spoken to Mr. Webster and he agreed that they should be assessed. Mr. Gibson appeared for Mr. Waller and said that the only question was as to whether or not they were tenants, and if they were the assessment should not be changed as it was right. He held that they are in possession until the close of the month, and having been assessed on the 14th it was just and should not be changed.

Mr. Webster said that on the 9th of April when assessing on Dundas st. he saw Mr. Ferguson moving out of the house and passed it for the time being, it on the 13th, in the evening. Mr. Waller came to him and demanded the assessment of Ferguson Bros. under the move.

Moved by Mr. McNeill, sec. by Mr. Jones, that the name of Ferguson Bros. be struck out as tenants of Mr. Waller—carried.

J. H. WAGAR'S APPEAL.
Mr. McNeill presented an appeal from J. H. Wagar to be assessed as tenant of Fred Wagar, Clarksville. It was found that he would destroy both gates, and as he used the same door as entrance and exit, the appeal was dismissed.

W. McCALLUM'S APPEAL.
Mr. McCallum asked to have his son, J. McCallum assessed jointly with him as owner. Moved by Mr. Roe, sec. by Mr. Jones, that the appeal be granted—carried.

It was then moved and second that the roll as amended be passed, and the motion having carried, the court adjourned.

Mr. EDITOR.—The people here are evidently determined to be somebody, and are showing as bold a front as the frontiers and towns of the front, notwithstanding the fact that this place is called by the vulgar only, of course a back settlement.

The whole community seems to be beggared, and to add to our affliction we have just passed through a great drought; our cattle are dying by the hundreds of thousands. Their carcasses cannot be sold for any sum, however small; and the ruin of the cattle dealers will inevitably bring a great deal of the land now held in masses into the market to be sold for a song. People East who have money, could not do better than to come out here in order to take advantage of the reckless way in which all kinds of property are sold. Valuable farms and ranches can now be had for one-twentieth of their value, and city property is for sale at prices which would have seemed ridiculous a few years ago. Southern California is described as an "ash heap," while the Sonoma, Sacramento, and Sonora Valleys are burned to a crisp for want of rain.

EMIGRATION TO CANADA.

The Belfast News thinks it is quite plain from the recent debate in the Dominion Parliament on the immigration estimate, that hon. members generally have begun to see that the immigration agency business has been overdone, in so far as sweeping into the Dominion thousands of people who were not wanted, and who are now a burden to the colony and to themselves, flying everywhere and anywhere from misery and hardship. The report of the Minister of Agriculture, says the News, shows that last year the Government spent $1,105 in assisting 1,761 indigent immigrants, while during the year 1873 the expenditure was $2,000 for assisting 8,000 indigent immigrants. We thought, judging from the flashy announcements in the literature of the walls, that there was room enough and work enough for all who might emigrate from Ireland, or any other part of the world to Canada; but Mr. Pope says that last year "1,761 indigent immigrants" were relieved, and four years ago, before anything was heard about the misery to which thousands of our credulous countrymen had become a prey, 8,000 indigent immigrants were on the relief list! We may form some idea from these facts of the condition of the immigrants who have lately been arriving in Canada. Mr.

As there is much comment in regard to the probability of the Russian fleet which left New York, going to sea for the purpose of inspecting vessels sus- pected of having arms and munitions of war on board, it may be proper to state that, according to our treaties with France, Prussia, Brazil, Sweden, the Netherlands, United States of Columbia, Spain, Holland and several other nations, the examining vessels shall remain out of gun-shot of the vessel to be searched, and send small boats to board the vessel suspected.

The proof of regularity with respect to the cargo must be certificates containing particulars of the cargo, place sailed from, where board, &c., but the hatches are not to be opened, nor any of the pack- ages, unless the vessel is brought ashore, and then in the presence of competent officers. TO CONSUMPTIVES.
Consumption, that scourge of humanity, is the great dread of the human family, in all civilized countries.

I feel confident that I am in possession of the only sure, infallible Remedy—new known to the profession—for the positive and speedy cure of that dread disease, and its unwelcome concomitants, viz: CATARRH, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, NERVOUS DEBILITY, &c., &c. Twenty-eight years experience, as a busy practitioner, in the best Consumption Hospitals of the Old and New World, has taught me the value of this Medicine in the cure of all Throat and Lung Complaints. Those suffering with consumption or any of the above maladies, by addressing me, giving symptoms, they shall be put in possession of this great boon, WITHOUT CHARGE, and shall have the benefit of my experience in thousands of cases successful treated. Full directions for prepara- tion and use, and all necessary advice and in- structions for successful treatment at your own home, will be received by you by return mail, free of charge, by addressing

LIQUID MANURE.

Manure in a liquid state is the most beneficial manner of applying it, when immediate results are required. Containing as it does the fertilizing principles in a liquid condition, it is more readily absorbed by the feeding roots of the plants. It can also be applied at all stages of the plant's growth, which often cannot be done with solid manure; and some plants, which are not in a condition for being much stimulated in the earlier stages of their growth, can more readily receive it at the time they do need it when in a liquid form. For instance, peach trees grown in pots or beds under glass, if heavily manured with ammoniacal fertilizers before or at a time they are started into growth, are apt to drop their fruit when stoning—the most critical period of their growth—but if applied after this stage, it of the greatest benefit to them, increasing the size of the fruit.

Farmers who allow the liquid part of their manure to get to waste, lose the most beneficial part of it, as ammonia is produced in the greatest abundance in the liquid part. The urine of cows, horses and swine, together with the drainings of their droppings, if allowed to run into a tank, then pumped on the manure heap or upon a composite heap, and then applied as a surface manure on the grass, will produce very beneficial effects. Some of the leading farmers in Scotland utilize all the urine and drainings of their barnyards in this manner. It is conveyed from the stables into a large tank, into which they place a pump. Near by they collect into a heap all the road scrapings and ditch cleanings they can secure on their farms, and pump upon it the contents of the tank, conveying it to different parts of the heap, with gutters. During the season the heap is turned once or twice, and when thoroughly saturated with the liquid, is conveyed to where it is wanted—more being added to the heap as it can be procured. According to Johnston the urine of man and that of the pig, for most soils, are more beneficial than that of the horse. The cow and the sheep; they contain phosphates—the phosphates of the horse, cow and sheep remaining in the solid excrements. In applying liquid manure to growing plants, great care should be exercised that it is not applied too strong, nor the ground saturated with it, as in either condition it is apt to destroy the tender rootlets of the plants.

Urine used in an unmixed state is very beneficial to plants. It should first be allowed to putrefy, than be largely diluted with water. Pigeons' dung makes an excellent liquid manure for all kinds of plants in pots, of a succulent or soft-wood nature. A peck put into a barrel of water and allowed to remain for a few days before being used, and then applied diluted with about one-half water I have used with very beneficial results on roses, fuchsias, geraniums, and other fast-growing plants.

Guano used as a liquid manure should be cautiously applied, for if used to strong it has very injurious effects. It should be mixed with water to the colour of weak tea before using, and twice a week is often enough for any class of plants. When a plant is injured with guano water its leaves get yellow and fall off, the oldest and most mature dropping first.—M. Milton, in Country Gentleman.

FARMERS MOVING TO TOWN

We notice, says the Hamilton Times, that a not very distant society of farmers has the following general proposition down on paper for its next debate: "Would it be advisable for farmers, after acquiring a competency and having passed the meridian of life, to sell their farms and retire to villages or cities to spend their declining years?" We are not prepared even to guess at the verdict which will be agreed to, but it is scarcely likely the resolution will be carried unless amended. The amendment would be in connection with the selling of the farms. In certain conditions, such as there being no son able to manage them, the sale would be proper enough, but otherwise good farm property should not too readily be disposed of. Its value always is steadily advancing and is never subject to the sudden and extreme fluctuations met in towns and cities. About the question of old farmers spending their declining years in centres of populations, it is precisely what they should do. They there find far more means of enjoying life, they no longer can nor need surrender to the exacting duties of their late honorable calling; they can live more happily and comfortably and will never regret the change they have made. This is the opinion of a large number of wealthy farmers who have come to reside in Hamilton, most of whom, however, beside acquiring city property, some to a very large amount, have retained the best of that they formerly owned in the country.

But there is a side to the question which is not mentioned in the resolution quoted; that is moving into town for the purpose of going into business. That is a point which should be discussed and, we believe, it can be but with one conclusion—which is that it is the most unsound policy a farmer can pursue. Take, for instance, one who, after years of toil, has acquired a competency. He is moved, either by his own wishes or the pressing representations of his family, perhaps, to sell or mortgage all he has, take up a store in town and invest his capital in some business, generally that of groceries. While his cash holds out he is "badgered with agents who have goods to sell him. He is no judge of them, he has no experience and he is taken advantage of at every turn—as the Grangers themselves have found out to their cost in some parts of Canada and the United States, where they threw the knowing middleman over their shoulders, and, in their entire ignorance of the trade, undertook directly to deal "at headquarters." The farmer-merchant finds himself continually defrauded, not only by those who sell him, in the several senses of that term, but also by those who buy from him. His customers are sure to include persons whose credit is worthless where they are known, and every "dead-beat" that can hear of him, and hear of him they assuredly will. In short, his lack of experience and the train hands.

His customers are sure to include persons whose credit is worthless where they are known, and every “dead-beat” that can hear of him, and hear of him they assuredly will. In short, his lack of experience at his new business is the rock on which he is wrecked. The exceptions are few. The majority of cases are as we have described them, where in a few years, well-to-do farmers have been completely ruined, which, happening at their time of life, is a disaster of the most terrible character. We, therefore, would like to see an amendment introduced into the resolution we have copied, know that it has been discussed, and that the general principle of experienced farmers, risking their property and means in business in towns, where they are strangers, has been emphatically condemned.

LIQUID GRAFTING WAX

There are many recipes for grafting wax, varying somewhat in their composition, according to the particular purpose for which they are intended. The Practical Farmer publishes the following formula:

Liquid grafting wax, which being about the consistency of honey, it says, may be readily applied with a brush for outdoor grafting, without the trouble of heating. It is likewise a good application for wounds in trees, cuts made in pruning, etc.: Melt together 1 pound of rosin, and 1 pound of good beef tallow. Remove from the stove and let cool until a scum forms over it, then add one teaspoonful of spirits of turpentine; replace on the stove and add seven ounces of a mixture of two parts strong alcohol and one part water, stirring briskly and taking care that the alcohol does not inflame, as it will if the mixture is too hot. Stir until the liquid is lost in the mixture, when it should be of the consistency of honey. Keep in a closed bottle and apply with a brush. If after a month or two it becomes hard, remelt, add a few more drops of turpentine, and of the alcohol and water. A few days after it is applied it becomes hard, and will remain unchanged, except that it grows harder, for an indefinite time.

A bridge on the Midland railway near Peterborough was fired by some ruffians in the hope of wrecking the night train. The catastrophe was averted, but the bridge was destroyed and destroyed. This is the third similar attempt of the Midland within a few weeks.

A New Court House, nearly completed in Rockford, Ill., recently fell down, killing ten men and wounding fourteen. The dome was 119 feet from the ground, and was supported by iron columns, which in turn rested on the brick wall. The latter was not constructed of sufficient strength to hold up the superincumbent weight. It accordingly gave way, and was followed by the entire dome and roof, leaving little more than four walls of the edifice standing. At the inquest on the Court House disaster, the architects placed the responsibility of the accident on the technical ignorance and incompetence of the local superintendent of the building. The evidence showed that the weight placed on the piers was almost double their bearing capacity.

The Waterloo (Que.) Advertiser says: A Sheffield Mountain farmer entered an insurance office one day this week, with a look on his face which clearly indicated that he appreciated fire insurance, and couldn't have a policy written on his property too soon. He accosted the agent in an anxious manner, and said he guessed he would have his barns insured. The agent, thinking he had a good thing started with the man to his premises about five miles out of town. Arriving, the good man's implicit trust and confidence in the correct principles and direct advantages of fire insurance were explained in the fact that about twenty-five of his neighbours were working “night and main” to save his buildings from destruction by a bush fire in close proximity. The agent declined the risk, and walked home in disgust.

Henry Ward Beecher says: “There is nothing for which I think God more fervently than for the unwavering faith he has given me in the purity, the virtue, the honor of women. I have had it from my youth, and now, at the end of a long life, I can say that I have not lost a particle of that chivalrous trust. Therefore, when I hear young men yelping their impertinences, middle-aged men cynically criticising, infirm old men murmuring their obscenities, I am utterly disgusted. My soul communes not with such men.” —That's right H.W. we all know you're a ladies' man.

A LECTURE TO YOUNG MEN.

WE have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's celebrated essay on the radical and permanent cure of all outmoded of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, of this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequence may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

THE THREE HOMES.

Where is my home? I asked a child
Who, in the morning air,
Was twining flowers most sweet and mild
In garlands for her hair.
My home, the happy heart replied,
And smiled in childish glee.
Is on the sunny mountain-side,
Where soft winds wander free.
Oh! blessings fall on artless youth,
And all its rosy hours.
When every word is joy and truth,
And treasures live in flowers.

Where is thy home? I asked of one
Who bent with flushing face
To hear a warrior's tender tale
In the wild wood's secret place.
She spoke not, but her varying cheek
The tale might well impart.
The home of her young spirit meek
Was in a kindred heart.
Ah! souls that well might soar above,
To earth will fondly cling.
And build their hopes on human love,
That light and fragile thing!

Where is thy home, thou lonely man?
I asked a pilgrim gray,
Who came, with furrowed brow and wan,
Slow musing on his way.
He paused, and with a solemn mien,
Upturned his holy eyes:
The land I seek thou ne'er hast seen—
My home is in the skies!
Oh! bless—thrice bless, the heart most true
To whom such thoughts are given,
That walks from worldly fetters free:
Its only home is heaven!

Pain in Shoulders, Back and Lungs,
and Droppings in Throat Disappear.

ST. MARK, P. O., 510 E. 12, 1875.

MR. T. J. B. HARDING,
DEAR SIR:—Being desirous that others may know something of the merits of your CON STITUTIONAL CATARRH REMEDY, I wish to inform you what it has done for me. I am twenty nine years old; had been out of health for about
five years. I had employed three or four dif ferent doctors, and tried various medicines,
without receiving any permanent benefit, but
continued rather to grow worse, until last fall,
when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe sore
ness and pain under the shoulder blades and
through the shoulders with very lame back,
and a feeling in my right lung as though there
was a weight bearing it down, with continual
dropping in the throat and down upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I com menced to take your Catarrh Remedy, one bot tle of which eased my pains and gave me an
improved appetite, and after taking four bot tles I was restored to health so as to be able to endure hard and continued labor, such as chop
ping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I at tribute solely, with God's blessing, to the use
of your Catarrh Remedy.

His horses and carriages were the fine

pleasures can drive away sorrow trouble, Mr. Burton would have enjoyed a state of perfect happiness. We in mingle in the enjoyments of life, and e
deavor to dispel care from the soul; b
unless the spirit be free from the strai of sorrow and guilt, our happiness will be incomplete.

People often wondered why Mr. Bart appeared so sorrowful at times; but no
could gaze into his soul—in the hidden secrets of his life. Could they have do so, they would have ceased to wonder.
Even his intimate friends knew not the source of his heart's sorrow. Whatever had occasioned his sadness had occur
many years since, and it had remained secret even from his own family.

Mr. Burton presented a fine person appearance. He was tall and well pro portioned, with a finely shaped head. H eyes were of deep azure, and his hair lig
in color. His deportment was graceful
there was nothing inelegant in his action or manners. He was usually dressed in faultless attire, yet there was nothing in his appearance that betokened vanity
neither did he possess any of that haugh
ness which characterizes the disposition
of many in his station of life. The rich
and the poor alike received from him the
same cordial treatment.

Somewhat different from her father
nature, yet similar to him in many re spects, was Annie Burton. Her soul was replete with happiness. Her beauty was
of a spiritual order, as if borrowed from the angels of heaven; there was a cheer
about her that bespoke a cheerful nature.

She had arrived at the age of eighteen years, and was now acknowledged to be the belle of Allan. Her eyes were dark with a soft angelic expression. Her hair hung in glossy curls down her shoulder
her forehead was full and noble looking
and her lips were like the red rose of summer. But it was her gentle disposi tion more than her outward beauty that won for her the love of others. She was like a ray of sunshine—the personification
of goodness itself.

Her winning ways and attractive man ners had gained for her the attentions
many a young gentleman. There were those who adored her on account of her father's wealth; there were those who worshiped her for her beauty; but the
was one who loved her for her own self; who, had she walked in the humble paths of life, would have thought not the loss of her. He loved her for the purity of her spirit, not for the gold dross that is too often the incentive to adoration.

Annie Burton gave no encouragement
to her lovers, with one exception. She detested flirtation, and trifled with a man's heart. In vain her suitors plead with her to share her future life with them; she had kindly, yet firmly, refus
their solicitations.

There was one whom she truly loved
it was he who worshipped her for her own self. To him she gave her heart, and cherished it as a treasure.

It was a beautiful day in June when Annie Burton left her father's house to take a walk outside of the city. The day was lovely; the soft, silvery sky and the verdant earth were adorned with the mild sunlight. The birds sang sweetly
the air and on the trees; the winds,
they floated softly over the land, bore the perfume of countless flowers. It seemed a relief to emerge from the tumult of
the city, and breathe the invigorating air
of the rural districts.

As she was walking slowly along, a man sprang over a fence at the side of the road, and came toward her. He was plainly dressed, yet with scrupulous neatness. He was one of those persons to whom one is strangely attracted at first sight. There was an expressiveness resting in his calm, blue eyes that won the index to a kindly disposition; yet
lacked neither courage nor firmness.

The meeting between Will Clayton—
for such was the new arrival's name—and Annie Burton was marked by deep feeling. It was plainly evident, judging from the demonstration of affection that was displayed in their greetings toward
each other, that their hearts were united
with bonds more stronger than those of mere friendship.

Before Will had seen Annie that day
he had been rambling in the woods and meadows, and was now on his way
toward the city; but since he had met
her, all desire to return vanished, and
accordingly, he walked slowly along by her side. She did not regret his presence—in fact, she esteemed it to be a deep pleasure to be near him.

Like his fair companion, Will Clayton
possessed a taste for the beautiful in nature. His soul was full of the poetry of life. He delighted in the charming influence that emanates from mossy dell
and refreshing groves.

Not far from the city of A— is situated a pretty lake. Towards this body of water our friends wended their way. In a little while they arrived near it, and
sat down on its grassy banks.
"Annie," said her lover, as he gazed on the silvery water before him, "what beautiful world this is at some times!"
"Is it not always so?" she said, gazing at him. "It is something in ourselves that makes it seem gloomy. If we are unhappy, all around us will look dark

THE THREE HOMES.
Where is my home? I asked a child
Who, in the morning air,
Was twining flowers most sweet and mild
In garlands for her hair.
My home, the happy heart replied,
And smiled in childish glee,
Is on the sunny mountain-side,
Where soft winds wander free.
Oh! blessings fall on artless youth,
And all its rosy hours,
When every word is joy and truth,
And treasures live in flowers.

Where is thy home? I asked of one
Who bent with flushing face
To hear a warrior's tender tale
In the wild wood's secret place.
She spoke not, but her varying cheek
The tale might well impart:
The home of her young spirit meek
Was in a kindred heart.
Ah! souls that well might soar above,
To earth will fondly cling,
And build their hopes on human love,
That light and fragile thing!

Where is thy home, thou lonely man?
I asked a pilgrim gray,
Who came, with furrowed brow and wan,
Slow musing on his way.
He paused, and with a solemn mien,
Upturned his holy eyes:
The land I seek thou'rt hast seen—
My home is in the skies!
Oh! bless—thrice bless, the heart must be
To whom such thoughts are given,
That walks from worldly fetters free:
Its only home is heaven!

THE MISSING RING.
Albert Burton was a wealthy banker, and lived in the pleasant city of Albany, in the State of New York. At the time of our narrative he was in the prime of life, having just entered his forty-fifth year. His manners were easy and pleasant, but, at times, he exhibited a moroseness that rendered him quite repellent to those who came within the circle of his influence.

Although wealthy, Mr. Burton passed many hours in sadness. It is true that he possessed the means wherewith to indulge in worldly pleasures; and, to judge from appearances, he seldom denied himself of that which his heart desired. His residence was furnished in the most magnificent style; the apartments were filled with costly furniture, and the walls adorned with beautiful pictures. His horses and carriages were the finest in the country; and in the floral seasons his gardens were redolent with the perfume of a thousand flowers. If terrestrial pleasures can drive away sorrow or trouble, Mr. Burton would have enjoyed a state of perfect happiness. We may mingle in the enjoyments of life, and endeavor to dispel care from the soul; but unless the spirit be free from the strains of sorrow and guilt, our happiness will be incomplete.

People often wondered why Mr. Burton appeared so sorrowful at times; but none could gaze into his soul—in the hidden secrets of his life. Could they have done so, they would have ceased to wonder. Even his intimate friends knew not the source of his heart's sorrow. Whatever had occasioned his sadness had occurred many years since, and it had remained a secret even from his own family.

Mr. Burton presented a fine personal

but if our hearts are free from unhappiness, then all the world appears beautiful to our eyes.
"That is true, Annie. The world is what we make it."

The conversation ceased for a time. Naught but the faint sighing of the wind was audible. As Will was gazing on the scenery that encircled the lake, his eyes fell on two men, walking in the distance. Shortly afterward, the sound of a vehicle broke on the air. An elegant carriage drove up near our friends, and a fashionably dressed young lady bowed politely to them.

"I came, Annie," she said, "to see if you didn't want to take a ride; but I notice that you have company with you."

Annie turned to Will, who, being very discriminating, quickly read her thoughts.

"No doubt," he said, "if Annie were alone she would not hesitate to accept your kind offer, Miss Sinclair; I trust however, that my presence will not deter her from so doing."

After a little hesitation, Annie took her seat by the side of Miss Sinclair. Will watched the carriage as it was being driven rapidly away, when he resumed his steps toward the city.

By leaving the road a quarter of a mile from where he started, and crossing a strip of woods, Will Clayton could easily save the distance of half a mile on his way home. He resolved to do so, and, accordingly, after walking the required distance, climbed over a fence and entered the woods. He had not gone far when the sound of voices fell on his ear, and the next moment two men passed in front of him. He recognized them as the same two that he had seen while at the lake.

"To act the character of a spy is contemptible," thought Will Clayton; but I am not mistaken, one of those men is Alf Walton. He is villain, and his companion bears no better appearance. I warrant that they are not together for any good purpose."

He followed them with noiseless steps. An Indian would not have experienced greater care in pursuing a trail. Presently they sat down by the trunk of a large tree. Cautiously, Will Clayton neared them; he finally reached a tree near where the men were sitting; prudence withheld him from advancing nearer.

"You are duced fortunate, Alf, in having such a hold on Burton," Will Clayton heard one of the men say to his companion. "Of course Miss Annie cannot refuse to marry you when she learns that her father is in your power."

Will Clayton's eyes sparkled with rage when he heard the name of Annie Burton mentioned.

"Certainly not," said Alf Walton; "a few words on my part would send him either to the gallows or States Prison."

The two men arose, shortly afterward, and walked away.

"I shall frustrate Alf Walton's plans if it lies in my power," thought Will Clayton, as he stepped from his place of concealment and wended his way toward home.

"Nothing, child." And Mr. Burton turned away his head to hide from his daughter the tears that stole unbidden into his eyes.

That night Mr. Burton passed the hours in a restless manner; his slumbers were disturbed by frightful dreams, in which Annie Burton and Alf Walton acted the principal parts. He woke often, his heart throbbing violently in his bosom. Morning dawned at last—a bright, glorious morning, full of the promise of a beautiful day.

HOW A LOTTERY PRIZE WAS WON.

When I wrote the other day about the modern passion for gambling I might have added something about the gambling that is constantly going on here outside of the clubs. There are no greater gamblers in the world than those who stake their money every day upon the Bourse, or upon the Petit Bourse during the evening. And the passion is not a whit less strong among the people who invest their small economies in stocks of various sorts. All try to get something to which a lottery is attached. There are semi-annual drawings to the Paris loans, and a number of prizes. In the first place, the lucky number gets 150,000 francs or about 200,000 francs according to the date of the loan; there is a smaller prize of 50,000 francs, several 1,000 francs, and a series of numbers are drawn to be paid off at their par value of the bonds. The Turkish loan has a drawing also, and a grand prize of 600,000 francs. Last year this was drawn by a man in Trieste, who came on here to negotiate it. As the Turks do not pay interest on their bonds, he had doubts about their paying the prizes drawn in their lottery, but he finally got some bankers to take it at 500,000 francs, giving $20,000 by way of discount. The Russian prize amounts to 200,000 roubles. All of these loans are popular, (save the Ottoman at this time,) for all who invest hope to draw a prize, and in addition to their interest they have the excitement attendant upon investment in a lottery. A curious case has just come before one of our tribunals, growing out of one of these drawings. Three years ago a Russian lady came to Paris and took rooms at the Byron Hotel, where she was very well received. She was a lady of a certain age, pretending to be a Countess and the wife of a General stationed in the Caucasus. She had money, and lived in style. In a very short time she took a fancy to the lady cashier of the hotel, and the two became exceedingly intimate. She had waited years for him, but every year added something to her wealth, and made her more and more an object to be desired. Even his intimate friends knew not the

Mr. Burton presented a fine personal appearance. He was tall and well proportioned, with a finely shaped head. His eyes were of deep azure, and his hair light
in color. His deportment was graceful;
there was nothing inelegant in his actions
or manners. He was usually dressed in faultless attire, yet there was nothing in his appearance that betokened vanity;
neither did he possess any of that haughti-
ness which characterizes the disposition
of many in his station of life. The rich
and the poor alike received from him the
same cordial treatment.

Somewhat different from her father in nature, yet similar to him in many respects, was Annie Burton. Her soul was replete with happiness. Her beauty was
of a spiritual order, as if borrowed from
the angels of heaven; there was a charm
about her that bespoke a cheerful nature.

She had arrived at the age of eighteen years, and was now acknowledged to be the bell of A—. Her eyes were dark,
with a soft, angelic expression. Her hair hung in glossy curls down her shoulders;
her forehead was full and noble looking,
and her lips were like the red rose of
summer. But it was her gentle disposition more than her outward beauty that
won for her the love of others. She was like a ray of sunshine—the personification
of goodness itself.

Her winning ways and attractive manners had gained for her the attentions of many a young gentleman. There were
those who adored her on account of her
father's wealth; there were those who worshipped her for her beauty; but there was one who loved her for her own tri-
self; who, had she walked in the humble
paths of life, would have thought none
the loss of her. He loved her for the purity of her spirit, not for the sordid dross that is too often the incentive to adoration.

Annie Burton gave no encouragement
to her lovers, with one exception. She detested flattery, and trifled with no man's heart. In vain her suitors pleaded with her to share her future life with them; she had kindly, yet firmly, refused
their solicitations.

There was one whom she truly loved;
it was he who worshipped her for her own

the air and on the trees; the winds, as they floated softly over the land, bore the perfume of countless flowers. It seemed
a relief to emerge from the tumult of
the city, and breathe the invigorating air
of the rural districts.

cealment and wended his way toward home.

CHAPTER II.

On the following morning, when Annie Burton entered the dining room, her mother noticed a troubled expression on her daughter's face.

After breakfast was finished, the latter retired to her room, and began to search the apartment.

"It is strange where that ring has gone," she said in a low tone; "I am certain that I put it on the shelf last Saturday, and now it is missing." And
she resumed her search with greater zeal,
but with the same unavailable result.

It was this loss that had caused the troubled expression that Mrs. Burton noticed resting on her daughter's face. It was not so much on account of the value
of the ring that she so deeply regretted
its loss; but she greatly prized it as a present from an aunt of hers who had been dead several years.

She resolved at present, however, to mention to no one anything in regard to
it, but to wait a while. In vain she strove to banish all thoughts relating to the ring from her mind; her appreciation of her aunt's kindness forbade her
from so doing.

That evening, as Mr. Burton sat alone
in his room, engaged in reading, he was aroused by the quick ringing of the bell
in the main hall. Laying his paper on a table at his side, he arose and went to answer the summons.

"Mr. Burton, I believe?" said a voice
at the door.

"That is my name," replied the banker.

"I should like to see you in private a
few moments," said the man.

"Walk in." And, as he spoke, Mr. Burton led the way to the parlor, and offered
the stranger a rest.

"My name is Walton," said the new arrival, sitting down; "I am from Cleveland. Perhaps you remember me."

Mr. Burton's face assumed an ashy
paleness as the man spoke.

"Well, sir, what do you want?" he asked, endeavoring to assume a haughty
appearance.

"What do I want?" replied the man,
in a sarcastic tone. "Well, there are many things that I would like to have.
I have come here this evening on business—not alone financially, but matrimonially. To come to the point—but are
we alone in the house?"

"Yes, there is no one here but ourselves," said Mr. Burton.

"Well," resumed Walton, "in the first place, I have taken a fancy to your daughter, and I have come here to ask
you if you'll use your influence in persuading her to become my wife."

"My daughter?" cried the banker.

"No, sir, never!"

"Are you aware," said Walton, in a calm voice, "that your fate lies in my

A curious case has just come before one of our tribunals, growing out of one of sian lady came to Paris and took rooms at the Byron Hotel, where she was very well received. She was a lady of a certain age, pretending to be a Countess and the wife of a General stationed in the Caucasus. She had money, and lived in style. In a very short time she took a fancy to the lady cashier of the hotel,

and the two became exceedingly intimate.
The cashier was an unmarried lady of thirty odd, who was dreaming of ultimate marriage, and was saving her money to buy her trousseau when the fortunate being who was to be her husband should chance along. She had waited years for him, but every year added something to her wealth, and made her more and more an object to be desired. She confided all this to the Russian lady, who gave her encouragement and hope, and the two spent many an hour together, talking over the matter. Naturally, the grande dame was informed of the economies laid aside for the marriage settlement.

As time wore on the cashier saw the lady's bills paid with less regularity, and dunning letters became frequent. Finally
she began to borrow from her "dear friend," the cashier. One day she pretended to have received an order from
her husband to return at once to Russia,
but lacked the 500 francs necessary for
the voyage. She borrowed this sum
from her friend, giving her a 500 rouble
bond to cover this and other sums,
promising to redeem it in six months.
This period covered the annual drawing.
The time came, and the bond did not draw a prize. The cashier then wrote
for her money, and in reply received an authorization to sell this bond. On reflection, she concluded to keep it herself.
A year rolled by, and at the next drawing this identical bond drew the grand prize of 200,000 roubles. The dreams of the cashier were now more than realized,
so far as money went, for she had never
gone so far as to fancy herself the possessor of $75,000. She went to the proper place, showed the title, and received that sum in solid French money.
But she had scarcely deposited it in the Bank of France in her own name when
the Russian lady came on to claim her bond and the 200,000 roubles. She pretended that the bond had simply been left as security for a debt. The case came before the courts last week, and the Russian lady lost her case. Her authorization to sell the bonds was regarded as a sufficient title, and it made no difference
whether the cashier sold it to herself or to a third party. The tribunal decided that the bond and prize it drew in the Russian lottery were the legitimate
property of the cashier.—Paris Letter,

CLERICAL EMBARRASMENTS.

An Episcopal clergyman in Connecticut
relates a couple of incidents aptly illustrating the embarrassments under which
gentlemen of the cloth are often placed, provided they are gifted with a keen appreciation of the humorous. Every one has felt a tendency on occasions of solemnity to laugh at the slightest incident calculated to provoke mirth, and the worthy rector
of ——— parish shares this feeling in common with his lay brethren. From his elevated position, of course every movement among his hearers is noticeable, and he confesses that it often requires an effort to preserve a sulate
countenance when witnessing the tricks
of restless urchins or the actions of eccentric individuals.

The instances to which he refers as particularly amusing were due to the presence of dogs, which appear to have
an unaccountable liking for churches.
During the early part of the service on a Sunday in Lent, a saucy-looking, frisky
little dog slipped up the main aisle, and

 to whom one is strangely attracted at first sight. There was an expression resting in his calm, blue eyes that was the index to a kindly disposition; yet he lacked neither courage nor firmness.

The meeting between Will Clayton—
 for such was the new arrival's name—and Annie Burton was marked by deep feeling. It was plainly evident, judge from the demonstration of affection that
 was displayed in their greetings toward
 each other, that their hearts were united
 with bonds more stronger than those of
 mere friendship.

Before Will had seen Annie that day,
 he had been rambling in the woods and
 meadows, and was now on his way
 toward the city; but since he had met
 her, all desire to return vanished, and
 accordingly, he walked slowly along by
 her side. She did not regret his presence—in fact, she esteemed it to be a
 deep pleasure to be near him.

Like his fair companion, Will Clayton
 possessed a taste for the beautiful in nature. His soul was full of the poetry of life. He delighted in the charming influence that emanates from mossy dells
 and refreshing groves.

Not far from the city of A— is situated a pretty lake. Towards this body of water our friends wended their way. In
 a little while they arrived near it, and
 sat down on its grassy banks.

"Annie," said her lover, as he gazed
 on the silvery water before him, "what a beautiful world this is at some times!"
 "Is it not always so?" she said, gazing
 at him. "It is something in ourselves
 that makes it seem gloomy. If we are unhappy, all around us will look dark;

"It is strange where that ring has
 gone," she said in a low tone; "I am
 certain that I put it on the shelf last Saturday, and now it is missing." And
 she resumed her search with greater zeal,
 but with the same unavailable result.

It was this loss that had caused the troubled expression that Mrs. Burton
 noticed resting on her daughter's face. It
 was not so much on account of the value
 of the ring that she so deeply regretted
 its loss; but she greatly prized it as a
 present from an aunt of hers who had
 been dead several years.

She resolved at present, however, to mention to no one anything in regard to
 it, but to wait a while. In vain she strove to banish all thoughts relating to the ring from her mind; her appreciation of her aunt's kindness forbade her
 from so doing.

That evening, as Mr. Burton sat alone
 in his room, engaged in reading, he was
 aroused by the quick ringing of the bell
 in the main hall. Laying his paper on a table at his side, he arose and went to answer the summons.

"Mr. Burton, I believe?" said a voice
 at the door.

"That is my name," replied the banker.

"I should like to see you in private a
 few moments," said the man.

"Walk in." And, as he spoke, Mr. Burton led the way to the parlor, and offered
 the stranger a rest.

"My name is Walton," said the new
 arrival, sitting down; "I am from Cleveland. Perhaps you remember me."

Mr. Burton's face assumed an ashy
 paleness as the man spoke.

"Well, sir, what do you want?" he
 asked, endeavoring to assume a haughty
 appearance.

"What do I want?" replied the man,
 in a sarcastic tone. "Well, there are
 many things that I would like to have.
 I have come here this evening on business—not alone financially, but matrimonially. To come to the point—but are
 we alone in the house?"

"Yes, there is no one here but ourselves," said Mr. Burton.

"Well," resumed Walton, "in the first
 place, I have taken a fancy to your
 daughter, and I have come here to ask
 you if you'll use your influence in per-
 suading her to become my wife."

"My daughter?" cried the banker.
 "No, sir, never!"

"Are you aware," said Walton, in a
 calm voice, "that your fate lies in my power—that a few words on my part are sufficient to disclose secrets in your life,
 which you had rather remain unknown to the world? If you refuse, Albert Burton, to accede to my demands, then I shall expose you."

"But I cannot compel her to marry
 you," said the banker.

"I'll warrant that when she learns that her father is a—"

"Hush!" spoke Mr. Burton, in a warning voice.

"I understood you to say that we were alone," said Walton, suspiciously.

"I did, but I do not wish you to talk so loud."

"Ah! the subject then is rather disa-greable! Well, do you promise?"

"Yes," replied Mr. Burton; "I'll see her to-morrow."

Shortly afterward, Alf Walton arose and left the house.

Mr. Burton loved his daughter with a deep affection; but the fearful thought that either Annie Burton should marry Alf Walton, or he must suffer disgrace, decided him as to the course he must pursue. He taxed his brain, endeavoring to think of a way by which he might evade the fearful issue when it should occur; but, alas! the light of hope faded
 in the darkness of despair.

It was quite late when Mrs. Burton and Annie returned home.

"Why, father, what troubles you?"
 asked Annie, in a sympathetic voice, noticing the sorrowful expression on her father's face. "Are you ill?"

"Can I do anything for you, father?"
 she asked tenderly.

the voyage. She borrowed this sum
 from her friend, giving her a 500 rouble
 bond to cover this and other sums,
 promising to redeem it in six months.
 This period covered the annual drawing.
 The time came, and the bond did not
 draw a prize. The cashier then wrote
 for her money, and in reply received an authorization to sell this bond. On reflection, she concluded to keep it herself.
 A year rolled by, and at the next drawing this identical bond drew the grand prize of 200,000 roubles. The dreams of
 the cashier were now more than realized,
 so far as money went, for she had never
 gone so far as to fancy herself the possessor of $75,000. She went to the proper place, showed her title, and received that sum in solid French money.
 But she had scarcely deposited it in the Bank of France in her own name when
 the Russian lady came on to claim her
 bond and the 200,000 roubles. She pretended that the bond had simply been
 left as security for a debt. The case
 came before the courts last week, and the Russian lady lost her case. Her authorization to sell the bonds was regarded as a sufficient title, and it made no difference
 whether the cashier sold it to herself or
 to a third party. The tribunal decided that the bond and prize it drew in the Russian lottery were the legitimate
 property of the cashier.—Paris Letter,

CLERICAL EMBARRASMENTS.

An Episcopal clergyman in Connecticut
 relates a couple of incidents aptly illustrating the embarrassments under which
 gentlemen of the cloth are often placed, provided they are gifted with a keen appreciation of the humorous. Every one has felt,
 a tendency on occasions of solemnity to
 laugh at the slightest incident calculated to provoke mirth, and the worthy rector of
 of—parish shares this feeling in common with his lay brethren. From his elevated position of course every
 movement among his hearers is notice-
 able, and he confesses that it often requires an effort to preserve a sedate countenance when witnessing the tricks
 of restless urchins or the actions of eccentric individuals.

The instances to which he refers as particularly amusing were due to the presence of dogs, which appear to have
 an unaccountable liking for churches.
 During the early part of the service on a Sunday in Lent, a saucy-looking, frisky
 little cur slipped up the main aisle, and encountered a hat just outside of one of the pew doors. He first smelled of it cautiously, then he set it around for a moment, and finally picking it up in his mouth shook it vigorously. By this time several persons had their eyes on the dog, and the sexton came tiptoeing up the aisle in pursuit, while the owner of the hat seized his cane and poked at the animal. Finding his situation uncomfortable, the cur trotted leisurely up the aisle to the platform, thence along to and down a side aisle, shaking the hat
 all the way with evident satisfaction.
 The sexton summoned assistance, and an energetic but quiet chase was organized, so as not to disturb the services, to which however, few in the congregation were now giving attention. Nearly every face in the house was either lighted up by a smile or distorted by a grin and the clergyman had a hard struggle to restrain his emotions as he witnessed the clever way in which the dog again dodged his pursuers, still clinging to the hat, which was by this time only a wreck of its former self.
 Finally the cur made his escape through an open door, and order was restored.
 But the climax, for the clergyman at least, came a moment later, when in continuing his reading, he encountered a warning reference to dogs—Matthew, xv.
 26. In running his eyes down the page he fortunately detected it before the words came to his lips, and like a flash
 the thought occurred to him that to read

A PROPHECY.

The following prophecy was current in the newspapers at the beginning of the Russian war, purporting to have been written at the time of the conquest of Constantinople by the Turks in the year 1453:

In twice two hundred years the Bear
The Crescent shall assail.
But if the Cock and Bull unite
The Bear shall not prevail.
But look, in twice ten years again,
Let Islam know and fear,
The Cross shall wax, the Crescent wane,
Grow pale and disappear.

SOMETHING ABOUT FASHION.

BERTIE WINKLER, in Woman's Words.

What do you think of a girl who stands her ground for a full hour in defending our toilets from the tirades of an old hawk-eyed lawyer and a young bachelor?

You see, she being a plain matter-of-fact girl, rather inclined to be strong-minded, they thought that to enlist her sympathy on their side of the question and induce her to reveal some of the mysteries in a lady's boudoir, was an easy matter.

Not a bit of it, however, as you will perceive by the way in which she meets her bearded antagonists. Prudence will not permit me to give the exact words, in which those gentlemen denounced our way of dressing as ridiculous and extravagant. Suffice to say that she listened patiently to a half hour's harangue against "spit-curls," "bangs," and "frizzes," followed by merciless abuse and misconception as to the utility of corsets, bustles, &c., finally concluding with a most ludicrous description of our "powders," "jewelry," and "finish."

Then our friend took the platform with the question whether a waxed mustache and Piccadilly were ennobling to mankind, especially when both were so stiff, and projecting such an outrageous length as to lacerate any ladies' cheek, should she venture to approach nearer than arm's length? "Oh, that's to keep them at distance," triumphantly replied the bachelor. Nothing daunted, however, she continued to inquire why such small sized, empty heads were placed on such magnificent broad shoulders? If the tailors aid had not been called to remedy the defects of nature? No reply. As for any lady being more under the dictates of Fashion we need but look at the tight-fitting trousers she ordered for the stronger sex, sometime ago, who quietly submitted to her orders, even if it did inconvenience them more than they were willing to acknowledge, and place them at the mercy of some obliging friend to pull them down over his fashionable shoes every time he rose from his seat, to be convinced of the contrary. Extravagance we need not mention. A look at their heavy seal rings, diamond shirt-studs, and gold-headed canes, will prove that they out rival any lady in unnecessary expenditures.

At this assertion, both of her adversaries withdrew discomfited. Now, ladies, endorse the words of your victorious sister, with three hearty cheers, and then listen to me.

There are those of both sexes, who, for want of something else to occupy their minds are ever on the alert for something new, which, when it appears, is for the sake of style, so overdone as to become either common or ridiculous. The pull-backs lately in vogue, were never described in reliable fashion papers as tight and clinging as they were worn by some of our fashionable belles, who, to be sure that they are in the fashion, always carry everything to extremes, until they are the ridiculous habiliments so justly denounced by every sensible person.

As long as our young people notion of manhood and womanhood consist in a high hat and cane, and a long-train dress

He woke often, his heart throbbing violently in his bosom. Morning dawned at last—a bright, glorious morning, full of the promise of a beautiful day.

HOW A LOTTERY PRIZE WAS WON.

When I wrote the other day about the modern passion for gambling I might have added something about the gambling that is constantly going on here outside of the clubs. There are no greater gamblers in the world than those who stake their money every day upon the Bourse, or upon the Petit Bourse during the evening. And the passion is not a whit less strong among the people who invest their small economies in stocks of various sorts. All try to get something to which a lottery is attached. There are semi-annual drawings to the Paris loans, and a number of prizes. In the first place, the lucky number gets 150,000 francs or about 200,000 francs according to the date of the loan: there is a smaller prize of 50,000 francs, several 1,000 francs, and a series of numbers are drawn to be paid off at their par value of the bonds. The Turkish loan has a drawing also, and a grand prize of 600,000 francs. Last year this was drawn by a man in Trieste, who came on here to negotiate it. As the Turks do not pay interest on their bonds, he had doubts about their paying the prizes drawn in their lottery, but he finally got some bankers to take it at 500,000 francs, giving $20,000 by way of discount. The Russian prize amounts to 200,000 roubles. All of these loans are popular, (save the Ottoman at this time,) for all who invest hope to draw a prize, and in addition to their interest they have the excitement attendant upon investment in a lottery. A curious case has just come before one of our tribunals, growing out of one of these drawings. Three years ago a Russian lady came to Paris and took rooms at the Byron Hotel, where she was very well received. She was a lady of a certain age, pretending to be a Countess and the wife of a General stationed in the Caucasus. She had money, and lived in style. In a very short time she took a fancy to the lady cashier of the hotel, and the two became exceedingly intimate. The cashier was an unmarried lady of thirty odd, who was dreaming of ultimate marriage, and was saving her money to buy her trousseau when the fortunate being who was to be her husband should chance along. She had waited years for him, but every year added something to her wealth, and made her more and more an object to be desired. She confined all this to the Russian lady, who gave her encouragement and hope, and the two spent many an hour together, talking over the matter. Naturally, the grande dame was informed of the econo-

his own part and that of his hearers. As the best course out of the dilemma, therefore he skipped the objectionable sentence, and none of his hearers suspected the true reason of his strange expression of countenance and faltering tone at the time. He had conquered, but not wishing to endure a second trial, gave the sexton rigid orders for the future concerning dogs.

Only a few weeks afterwards, however, and while the affair above related was still fresh in his memory, another adventure of the same nature occurred. A country couple came into the city to be married, and the service was performed in the church. Accompanying the couple was a brother of the bridegroom, who brought a dog with him, the groom having one also, and both having escaped the notice of the sexton. The brother seated himself in a front pew, and undertook the task of keeping both dogs quiet. At first they were in the aisle, but eventually the brother lured his own dog into the pew, and placing the animal's head between his knees, held him fast. Then he endeavored to entice the other into the pew by snapping his fingers softly and uttering a low whistle, all of which the clergyman could not avoid noticing. The stray animal would come as far as the pew door, but then, seeing the scrape in which his companion had become involved by over confidence, would turn tail and trot away. Then followed a renewal of the whistling and finger-snapping, until at last the clergyman could endure it no longer, and cutting the ceremony as short as possible, fled to a side room where he could give vent to his feelings. He says that since these two affairs he has never ventured to proceed with a service when a dog was any where in sight, for it would be impossible for him to keep his mind concentrated on his duties.—Harper's Magazine for June.

As time wore on the cashier saw the
lady's bills paid with less regularity, and dunning letters became frequent. Finally
she began to borrow from her "dear
friend," the cashier. One day she pretended to have received an order from
her husband to return at once to Russia,
but lacked the 500 francs necessary for
the voyage. She borrowed this sum

ONLY ONE CHILD.

One time, when the army of Italy was crossing the Alps, threescore and more years ago, on that famous expedition
with which all adventurous history rings, a nameless drummer boy was swept from the ranks, by the sudden dash of an avalanche, hurrying him down into into a deep hollow, lined with never dissolving snow, such as frequently lies along among these desolate mountains. Singularly enough, he was not seriously injured by the plunge; he had slipped and slid over the crust of ice, and his light body had met with very few bruises and no blows that were fatal.

He clambered up to the top of the mass, and waved his hands aloft to show that he was alive. Along the giddy brink, two hundred feet above, the advancing train slowly and and wearily filed on. His drum still hung suspended from his neck. It could not be said just what he intended—to keep his blood warm, or to attract the notice of the men—but he began to beat the military calls and changes to which he had been trained. In that clear, frosty air sound goes to an almost incredible distance.
Every stroke of the tattoo, the reveille,
the advance, the charge, was heard by every soldier that marched on; they commented admiringly upon the pluck of this brave little musician, who patiently kept his sticks flying.

Of course the path up the mountain side zigzag, in order to rise over the immense acclivity. Thus it came to pass that for awhile the whole army would be out of sight, and then return again, near in line, but further up the steep. Clear and echoing floated up that rattling drum beat on their ears. Hardy veterans were there, who wept as the hours passed and they perceived they were leaving the poor boy behind. No command seemed likely to come now for any effort to save his life. Word had already been sent to the Emperor, but he decided to leave the lad where he was. What was a single drummer boy to the army of Napoleon Bonaparte!
And before long it became evident that so the lad understood it likewise.

He redoubled his activity. Natural fear of freezing stimulated him for a short time to renewed exertion, and he vigorously plied his arms to keep his life pulse warm. Far along the thin bright ridge above him, he saw the vanishing columns growing fainter. At last he knew that they did not intend to give him rescue. Then brave in the midst of absolute despair, he suddenly changed the brisk relief call he had been beating, to a sadder strain, and a deeper meaning. He pause a few moments, then began a funeral march. They all heard those sober strokes of death in the cold air, but could give no heed.

It can be well understood that every father of a son at home, among that vast host, yearned over the lad with suffering of agony that was almost stifling.
For as he saw the courageous endurance and, finally, the heroic surrender, when the tired boy at last decently composed his limbs on the snowy banks to die, with the frost for his shroud, and the falling night for his pall, he shuddered to think this lost lad might have been his own.

Since that, for many a year—so the romances of those days tell us—the veterans of the Italian campaign have hushed their voices at the camp-fires as they told the tale of the drummer boy of the Alps, and thought of the silent solitudes
where now his slender body lay frozen beside his drum.

Only a child! Yet children have souls.
Souls are more than bodies. Immortal life is more than temporal. Yet the calu-world march on as if empires hung on the

THE PILGRIMS IN ROME.

lady being more under the dictates of Fashion we need but look at the tight-fitting trousers she ordered for the stronger sex, sometime ago, who quietly submitted to her orders, even if it did inconvenience them more than they were willing to acknowledge, and place them at the mercy of some obliging friend to pull them down over his fashionable shoes every time he rose from his seat, to be convinced of the contrary. Extravagance we need not mention. A look at their heavy seal rings, diamond shirt-studs, and gold-headed canes, will prove that they out rival any lady in unnecessary expenditures.

At this assertion, both of her adversaries withdrew discomfited. Now, ladies, endorse the words of your victorious
sister, with three hearty cheers, and then listen to me.

There are those of both sexes,
who, for, want of something else
to occupy their minds are ever on the alert for something new,
which, when it appears, is for the sake of style, so overdone as to become either common or ridiculous. The pull-backs lately in vogue, were never described in reliable fashion papers as tight and clinging as they were worn by some of our fashionable belles, who, to be sure that they are in the fashion, always carry everything to extremes, until they are the ridiculous habilitments so justly denounced by every sensible person.

As long as our young people notion of manhood and womanhood consist in a high hat and cane, and a long-train dress with plenty of finery, I fear any preaching to the contrary will effect but little.

I am no advocate of impossible dress reform by any means. I simply wish to see a woman appear attractive, with as little show and extravagance as possible.
A woman's future depends largely upon her style of dressing, and since sensible men are rarely attracted by a person dressed in and above the height of fashion, it is essential to her happiness as well as to the honor of her sex, that she should let good common sense govern the desire to appear gay and conspicuous in fashionable circles. It is by no means an honor to be called the bell of the evening party, when that title has been conferred by expensive dress, in which case she will, even if courted for a while, be avoided by the well-meaning portion, who dreaded the expense of supporting such a bundle of satin and lace.

Economy is the rule of the day, and that should in all cases decide a lady's choice in what she wears. Beauty unadorned is a rare sight. But, oh, ladies —beauty adorned in that rare, simple elegance which characterizes every true woman, and which has been admired
through all ages—let that be your study and your idea of perfect womanhood.

Turkish Atrocities.

Gladstone in his recent speech on the Eastern Question spoke as follows:—
"What I want to know is whether we are to continue making ourselves ridiculous,
and at the same time utterly deluding
the world by what the Government is pleased to call remonstrance upon these subjects. (Cheers.) This matter grows worse and worse! We have a new crop of horrors reported from Erzeroum as having occurred no longer ago than the 14th of March. A body of troops went into a village and demanded food and money. Their demands were complied with, and they then proceeded to maltreat the men and to violate the women and girls, several of whom died in consequence of the treatment to which they were subjected. On this occasion again an energetic telegram was despatched in the first instance, but afterwards Lord Derby spoke with bated breath, and, as on the previous occasion, nothing came of the matter. My contention is that this conduct is not compatible with the honour of England, and that if no result is to follow upon communications of the kind to which I allude they ought never to be made. It is bad enough to say that you will take no notice of crimes such as those, but it is worse to notice them in a way which you know full well can pro-apartment.

"It is strange where that ring has come," she said in a low tone; "I am certain that I put it on the shelf last Thursday, and now it is missing." And she resumed her search with greater zeal, it with the same unavailable result.

It was this loss that had caused the troubled expression that Mrs. Burton noticed resting on her daughter's face. It was not so much on account of the value of the ring that she so deeply regretted the loss; but she greatly prized it as a present from an aunt of hers who had been dead several years.

She resolved at present, however, to content to not care anything in regard to it, but to wait a while. In vain she strove to banish all thoughts relating to the ring from her mind; her appreciation of her aunt's kindness forbade her from so doing.

That evening, as Mr. Burton sat alone in his room, engaged in reading, he was aroused by the quick ringing of the bell of the main hall. Lying his paper on a table at his side, he arose and went to answer the summons.

"Mr. Burton, I believe?" said a voice at the door.

"That is my name," replied the banker.

"I should like to see you in private a few moments," said the man.

"Walk in." And, as he spoke, Mr. Burton led the way to the parlor, and offered the stranger a rest.

"My name is Walton," said the new rival, sitting down; "I am from Cleveland. Perhaps you remember me."

Mr. Burton's face assumed an ashy paleness as the man spoke.

"Well, sir, what do you want?" he asked, endeavoring to assume a haughty appearance.

"What do I want?" replied the man, a sarcastic tone. "Well, there are many things that I would like to have. I have come here this evening on business—not alone financially, but matrimonially. To come to the point—but are you alone in the house?"

"Yes, there is no one here but ourselves," said Mr. Burton.

"Well," resumed Walton, "in the first place, I have taken a fancy to your daughter, and I have come here to ask you if you'll use your influence in persuading her to become my wife."

"My daughter!" cried the banker. "No, sir, never!"

"Are you aware," said Walton, in a low voice, "that your fate lies in my power—that a few words on my part are sufficient to disclose secrets in your life, which you had rather remain unknown to the world? If you refuse, Albert Burton, to accede to my demands, then I will expose you."

"But I cannot compel her to marry me," said the banker.

"I'll warrant that when she learns that her father is a—"

"Hush!" spoke Mr. Burton, in a warning voice.

"I understood you to say that we were alone," said Walton, suspiciously.

"I did, but I do not wish you to talk aloud."

"Ah! the subject then is rather disagreeable! Well, do you promise?"

"Yes," replied Mr. Burton; "I'll see to it to-morrow."

Shortly afterward, Alf Walton arose and left the house.

Mr. Burton loved his daughter with a fond affection; but the fearful thought that either Annie Burton should marry Alf Walton, or he must suffer disgrace, decided him as to the course he must pursue. He taxed his brain, endeavoring to think of a way by which he might evade the fearful issue when it should occur; but, alas! the light of hope faded in the darkness of despair.

It was quite late when Mrs. Burton and Annie returned home.

"Why, father, what troubles you?" asked Annie, in a sympathetic voice, noticing the sorrowful expression on her father's face.

"Are you ill?"

"Can I do anything for you, father?" he asked tenderly.

for the voyage. She borrowed this sum from her friend, giving her a 500 rouble bond to cover this and other sums, promising to redeem it in six months. This period covered the annual drawing. The time came, and the bond did not draw a prize. The cashier then wrote for her money, and in reply received an authorization to sell this bond. On reflection, she concluded to keep it herself. A year rolled by, and at the next drawing this identical bond drew the grand prize of 200,000 roubles. The dreams of the cashier were now more than realized, so far as money went, for she had never gone so far as to fancy herself the possessor of $75,000. She went to the proper place, showed her title, and received that sum in solid French money. But she had scarcely deposited it in the Bank of France in her own name when the Russian lady came on to claim her bond and the 200,000 roubles. She pretended that the bond had simply been left as security for a debt. The case came before the courts last week, and the Russian lady lost her case. Her authorization to sell the bonds was regarded as a sufficient title, and it made no difference whether the cashier sold it to herself or to a third party. The tribunal decided that the bond and prize it drew in the Russian lottery were the legitimate property of the cashier.—Paris Letter, N. Y. Times.

CLERICAL EMBARRASMENTS.

An Episcopal clergyman in Connecticut relates a couple of incidents aptly illustrating the embarrassments under which gentlemen of the cloth are often placed, provided they are gifted with a keen appreciation of the humorous. Every one has felt a tendency on occasions of solemnity to laugh at the slightest incident calculated to provoke mirth, and the worthy rector of——parish shares this feeling in common with his lay brethren. From his elevated position of course every movement among his hearers is noticeable, and he confesses that it often requires an effort to preserve a serene countenance when witnessing the tricks of restless urchins or the actions of eccentric individuals.

The instances to which he refers as particularly amusing were due to the presence of dogs, which appear to have an unaccountable liking for churches. During the early part of the service on a Sunday in Lent, a saucy-looking, frisky little cur slipped up the main aisle, and encountered a hat just outside of one of the pew doors. He first smelled of it cautiously, then he led it around for a moment, and finally picking it up in his mouth shook it vigorously. By this time several persons had their eyes on the dog, and the sexton came tiptoeing up the aisle in pursuit, while the owner of the hat seized his cane and poked at the animal. Finding his situation uncomfortable, the cur trotted leisurely up the aisle to the platform, thence along to and down a side aisle, shaking the hat all the way with evident satisfaction. The sexton summoned assistance, and an energetic but quiet chase was organized, so as not to disturb the services, to which however, few in the congregation were now giving attention. Nearly every face in the house was either lighted up by a smile or distorted by a grin and the clergyman had a hard struggle to restrain his emotions as he witnessed the clever way in which the dog again dodged his pursuers, still clinging to the hat, which was by this time only a wreck of its former self. Finally the cur made his escape through an open door, and order was restored. But the climax, for the clergyman at least, came a moment later, when in continuing his reading, he encountered a warning reference to dogs—Matthew, xv. 26. In running his eyes down the page he fortunately detected it before the words came to his lips, and like a flash the thought occurred to him that to read this, after what had happened could not fail to provoke merriment both on in line, but further up the steep. Clear and echoing floated up that rattling drum beat on their ears. Hardy veterans were there, who wept as the hours passed and they perceived they were leaving the poor boy behind. No command seemed likely to come now for any effort to save his life. Word had already been sent to the Emperor, but he decided to leave the lad where he was. What was a single drummer boy to the army of Napoleon Bonaparte! And before long it became evident that so the lad understood it likewise.

He redoubled his activity. Natural fear of freezing stimulated him for a short time to renewed exertion, and he vigorously plied his arms to keep his life pulse warm. Far along the thin bright ridge above him, he saw the vanishing columns growing fainter. At last he knew that they did not intend to give him rescue. Then brave in the midst of absolute despair, he suddenly changed the brisk relief call he had been beating, to a sadder strain, and a deeper meaning. He paused a few moments, then began a funeral march. They all heard those sober strokes of death in the cold air, but could give no heed.

It can be well understood that every father of a son at home, among that vast host, yearned over the lad with suffering of agony that was almost stifling. For as he saw the courageous endurance and, finally, the heroic surrender, when the tired boy at last decently composed his limbs on the snowy banks to die, with the frost for his shroud, and the falling night for his pall, he shuddered to think this lost lad might have been his own.

Since that, for many a year—so the romances of those days tell us—the veterans of the Italian campaign have hushed their voices at the camp-fires as they told the tale of the drummer boy of the Alps, and thought of the silent solitudes where now his slender body lay frozen beside his drum.

Only a child! Yet children have souls. Souls are more than bodies. Immortal life is more than temporal. Yet the calm world marcher as if empires hung on the balance of the moment, and even the drum-beat of a soul calling for help need not be heeded or heard.

THE PILGRIMS IN ROME.

AN AUDIENCE WITH THE POPE.

LONDON, May 25.—A Rome despatch says the American pilgrims numbered fifty ecclesiastics and one hundred and fifty lay members, and were led by the Archbishop of Philadelphia and the Bishop of Allegheny, Nachitoches, Albany, Louisville, Galveston, Detroit, Green Bay, Hartford, and others. About one hundred and fifty American Catholic residents and visitors were also present, with students of American colleges and the American students of the propaganda. After the addresses they were presented to the Pope, who was seated on his throne. His Holiness replied that he remembered how an eminent Cardinal had told him at the commencement of his pontificate that from America would come the great comfort of the Church. He now saw the fulfilment of that prediction. He spoke in great praise of the American nation, the great things it had accomplished, and how in the flower of its youth it had acquired strength sufficient to arouse the jealousy of European nations, but there were errors of youth in nations, as in men, and he would remind them of two he had noticed in them, viz., too great precipitancy in the pursuit of material things, and too proud a feeling of independence. They prided themselves on being Republicans—(here there was a laugh, in which the Cardinals joined)—but they must remember that all must bow the head to enter Paradise. They must be humble, and not let material things interfere with prayer. He blessed all the American people, the Catholics that they might continue firm in the faith, the Protestants that they might be illuminated, and prayed that good might descend in abundance upon them all.

Safety Railway Signals.

A flashing light that indicates the speed and distance of a train, and shows whether it is at rest or in motion, has been introduced as a rear light on freight trains. It is formed of two lights—one red and one white—and designed to be placed one on each side of the (caboose) car, so that they may be seen in both directions on the line. A simple device for hiding the lights at intervals is affixed to each lamp so that it may be made to "flash" or alternately appear and disappear, and by suitable gearing this is connected with one of the axles of the car. While the car is at rest the lights are steadily visible; when the train moves the lights flash once for each revolution of the wheels, and thus its movements and actual speed can be easily estimated as far as the light can be seen. Another advantage results from the fact that the white light is visible at a greater distance than the red. The engineer of a following train may from this keep within the limits of safe distance by keeping the flashing red light dim or quite obscure and by coming to a stop the moment the flashing runs slow or stops and the lights become fixed and steadily visible.

A pattern helmet has been approved by the Queen, and will shortly be definitely adopted as the head-dress for the army. The material is cork; the colour dark blue for home service, and white in India and on foreign stations; with a handsome gilt plate and gilt spike. The effect is soldierlike; while it is lighter, more durable, and a far greater protection to the head than the shako in present use.

tunity of perusing it may judge to what extent the Hon. Mr. SIMPSON has transgressed in the matter, and the good reasons on which are based his claims for the banks of Ontario:—

(Private.)

(COPY.)

OTTAWA, Dec. 8, 1873.

DEAR SIR,—In accordance with your request I now state in writing the substance of the conversation I had the pleasure of having with you on Friday morning in reference to the deposits of the Dominion Government.

I complain that not now, nor perhaps at any other time, have these deposits been fairly divided between the respective Provinces, taking as a basis of such division either population, wealth, the volume of commercial transactions, or the banking capital in them, and that in the different Provinces great injustice has been shown in the distribution of these deposits; that while it contributes largely to the revenue of the country—many think to the extent of one-half of the gross amount—it has not now, nor has it had for years, one-tenth of the Government deposits or Government surpluses placed with its moneyed institutions. I hold it has a right to expect and demand from your Government fair play and equal justice in the disposal of your (for the time being) surplus funds.

To prove that our province is not, and has not been, fairly dealt by, permit me to quote a few figures from an official statement now before me, showing the balances held by the Government on the morning of the 3rd inst.:

Total amount at credit of Government in all banks of the Dominion, $8,237,000.

In all Ontario banks, $837,000.

In Lower Canada and eastern Province banks, $7,400,000.

Or about 10 per cent. of the gross amount in Ontario banks at the credit of the Government on the same day.

With the same banks on open accounts, or without interest, $3,753,000. Of this sum Ontario banks only held $154,000, or less than four per cent.

Do you think that we in Ontario should be satisfied with the state of things indicated by the above figures?

Two of our largest Ontario banks with a united paid up capital of over $8,500,000 (eight and a half millions) had between them on one account $20,000, and the major part of this sum was held for only a few days, while several Lower Canada banks with not a tithe of this capital, had from five to twenty times the amount named. One institution, and that not a commercial one, had for strictly jobbing or speculation purposes, over one million of the people's money, and a large portion of it without interest. The two banks referred to had only $20,000 on the same day, and all our banks held only $154,000 on open account.

I complain that while our banks in Ontario had in all forms only $837,000, that the banks or branches of banks, doing business in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick held $1,750,000 of the people's money, while the population of these two provinces united is not one-half of that of Ontario; nor can I believe that their united wealth bears a larger proportion to ours. I contend the great injustice done to our moneyed institutions has cramped them in their dealings with their customers, and has injuriously affected every branch of trade in Ontario.

I think I have said enough to prove that Ontario has not been fairly dealt by, and now I ask you and your Government, in the name of the people of Ontario, to right the wrong. Let me in conclusion suggest a few ideas that I beg to commend to your consideration in bringing about this end:

1. I think the Government should still employ the Bank of Montreal as its chief fiscal agent.

2. I think you should arrange as soon as convenient that the revenue arising

ARREST OF THE MURDERERS.

COLBORNE, Ont., June 1.—A fearful crime was committed in the little country village of Castleton a few days since. The victim, Miss Alberta Wade, was a daughter of John Wade, of Brighton Township, and was engaged as school teacher in the neighborhood of Castleton. The last seen of her alive was on Friday evening of last week, when she was noticed driving with a young man named Mallory, the son of a farmer in the neighborhood. About one o'clock that night young Mallory returned home alone, and informed his father that he wanted money, as he had got into a scrape which would oblige him to leave the country; that he had seduced a young lady; and on his father advising him to marry her he stated that he could not, as she had gone. After securing what money he could he drove to Colborne, where he bought a second-class ticket for Detroit. By some means the news that Miss Wade was missing did not reach his father's house until last Sunday. A search was instituted, but not until Thursday morning last was her body discovered. It was found in a lonely dell, in a low swampy place in the woods about a quarter of a mile from Mallory's farm, and about three miles north of Castleton. She had been thrown into a hole apparently scraped out with a hoe, and when found had all her clothes on except her drawers which were tightly drawn around her head and neck. A covering of loose earth, leaves, brush, &c., was thrown over the body to the depth of a few inches, the top being carefully smoothed over with moss and leaves to make the grave look as natural as possible. The body had been taken to the woods in a buggy or wagon, the ground where the horse had stood near by having been pawed. The presence of a freshly broken bough was the means of indicating the whereabouts of the body.

An inquest and a post mortem examination have been held—the former by Messrs Gould and Fyfe, acting as coroners, and the latter by Dr. Willoughby, assisted by Drs. Thorburn, Deans, Douglas, and Richardson. From the evidence it would appear that the girl was about four months advanced in pregnancy, and it is generally supposed that young Mallory was her seducer. When it was found that she was enccinte she was induced to visit an old man named Smith, who bears the reputation of being one of the detestable medical specialists who are resorted to in such cases. He had apparently tried mechanical appliances several times, but had failed. One of his attempts appears to have been made a week ago last Tuesday, as a Mrs. Miller stated in evidence that Smith had told her that he had then made the attempt and had failed, but was bound to accomplish it yet. She stated also that an appointment for another attempt had been made for the following Friday evening,—that on which Miss Wade was noticed driving with Mallory. It further appears from the evidence that on Friday evening after driving in the direction of Grafton with a young lady. Though the latter has not been positively identified as Miss Wade, the evidence of several witnesses as to her dress, &c., goes to show almost conclusively that it was she. The pair were traced to a hotel in Grafton. Here there is a break in the chain of evidence, but there are good hopes that on the resumption of the inquest on to-day—the missing links will be supplied. The two were noticed at a hotel in Grafton at eight o'clock on Friday evening. The same evening about nine Mallory was give two or three gasps, and then, imagined, she fainted away. They both became alarmed, Weldon according to Smith's story being so terrified that he seemed incapable of word. On Smith asking him, after a few minutes had elapsed, what he proposed, Weldon said he would go and do Cope Mallory. He went out for purpose, and returned in ten or fifteen minutes bringing Mallory with him, according to this statement it would appear either that Mallory was within short distance off (probably in the road on the other side of the road, as Weldon had left the buggy), or that he had been behind hand in his appointment at the hut, and was on the way when Weldon met him. The two men carried the body across the fields that lie between Smith's shanty and the road running north from Castleton. Smith gathered from the conversation between the parties that the horse buggy was standing in the grove on the other side of the road. Smith's occasion, so far as it affects the case at sent, ends here, but he hinted vaguely that there was "another party" mixed in the affair, though he refused to reveal the name.

Miss Wade's parents live at a considerable distance from where she was found, and did not hear of her absence several days, and when they did the news it was in the shape of a rumour that she and Cope Mallory had run a suspicion that this was not the true of affairs first arose from finding that girl had left in her room all her clothes except those she had on, and her jewelry.

Castleton is a straggling little village some six or seven miles north of Colborne station, on the Grand Trunk railway, and lying on the main road runs north from that station through the county of Northumberland. The country in the neighborhood appears to have been settled for a good many years, the inhabitants—including the Waddells, Mallorys, and Weldon families—mostly well-to-do farmers. In a wet little log hut, situated on the top of a hill about half a mile from the village, it has lived for many years back a person generally known in the neighborhood as "Old Dave," or who is now pretty clearly proven to have been one of the principal characters in the tragedy. "Old Dave" is about 56 years of age, and has lived in or near Castleton for the last thirty years. Ostensibly subsisted on the wages of the odd work which he was accustomed to perform for the farmers around the village. He wears about as villainous a look of countenance as Providence ever hung the front of a human being to warn the world against a scoundrel. When speaking his face is distorted into a hideous grim, and his small, twinkling eyes, out in a cowardly, uncertain kind of way from beneath a pair of bushy brows. In fact a combination of features so indicative of low brutality is seldom met with in real life, and the "make-up" which could successfully counterfeit the stage would be a fortune to its wearer. Strange and startling as it may appear this creature has borne in the neighborhood the reputation of a "professional abortionist for years back; and that has had a good many patients is apparent, not merely from the common knowledge of the country, but from his own confession and the testimony taken at inquest, to say nothing of the still more conclusive evidence in the shape of instruments found in his den. THE EXPRESS.

NANANEE, JUNE, 8th 1877.

The Halifax organ of the Tory Party, wailing over the lack of spirit displayed by the faithful in their shabby treatment of the Ontario organ The Mail, which is just now in the deep waters of financial tribulation, says reprovingly, to this effect, "In times past under the election laws, the Conservative Party spent fifty times the amount that would be required to put The Mail in a sound financial condition. Let us make a little calculation; the amount required to put The Mail in a sound financial condition," is estimated by good authority to be about one hundred thousand dollars. Therefore, as $100,000 is to fifty, so is the amount spent in times past under the election laws, by the Conservative party to five million, a rather modest sum for the party that is particularly industrious at the present time in throwing stones at the political sins of the Reform party. If the financial management of The Mail, held up as the means of the salvation of the country, but in reality the doer of the dirty work of the party, is a sample of the manner in which its disciples would manage the finances of the Dominion, we hope the day will be long postponed that will place the Finance Department of the Government at the mercy of the Reactionists and depose the present minister who has safely guided the ship of state through the stormiest waters, financially speaking, that have ever broken upon the shores of the Dominion.

the Government on the same day.
 With the same banks on open accounts, or without interest, $3,753,000. Of this sum Ontario banks only held $154,000, or less than four per cent.
 Do you think that we in Ontario should be satisfied with the state of things indicated by the above figures?
 Two of our largest Ontario banks with a united paid up capital of over $8,500,000 (eight and a half millions) had between them on account $20,000, and the major part of this sum was held for only a few days, while several Lower Canada banks with not a tithe of this capital, had from five to twenty times the amount named. One institution, and that not a commercial one, had for strictly jobbing or speculation purposes, over one million of the people's money, and a large portion of it without interest. The two banks referred to had only $20,000 on the same day, and all our banks held only $154,000 on open account.

I complain that while our banks in Ontario had in all forms only $837,000, that the banks or branches of banks, doing business in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick held $1,750,000 of the people's money, while the population of these two provinces united is not one-half of that of Ontario; nor can I believe that their united wealth bears a larger proportion to ours. I contend the great injustice done to our moneyed institutions has cramped them in their dealings with their customers, and has injuriously affected every branch of trade in Ontario.

I think I have said enough to prove that Ontario has not been fairly dealt by, and now I ask you and your Government, in the name of the people of Ontario, to right the wrong. Let me in conclusion suggest a few ideas that I beg to commend to your consideration in bringing about this end.

1. I think the Government should still employ the Bank of Montreal as its chief fiscal agent.
 2. I think you should arrange as soon as convenient that the revenue arising from customs, excise, and the post-office, should be deposited with the banks of the respective Provinces, you selecting the banks and fixing general principles to apply to all.
 3. That all the banks have an opportunity of competing for exchange, whether bought or sold by the Government.

CATECHISM FOR TORIES.

The St. Thomas Journal has arranged the following Catechism, to be answered by the present opposition. Any reader not acquainted with the political history of the country cannot fail to plainly see the intended real parallel in circumstances, actually brought about by members of the Tory party and the hypothetical questions propounded:

Suppose it was announced to the public to-morrow, and unquestionable evidence of the fact submitted, that Mr. MacKenzie had given the contract for the Welland canal improvements—the same for which he is now inviting tenders—to a company of American and Canadian capitalists on the condition that they contributed $300,000 to the Reform election fund,—how many Reformers or "Clear Grits" among all his followers in Parliament and in the country would stand by him one day?

Or suppose it was shown that his Minister of Justice, Mr. Blake, had consented to accept from the Grand Trunk Railway—now indebted to the Government in the sum of $15,142,633.33—a sum of $15,000, by way of contributing to a Blake testimonial, while the railway paid not one cent of principal or interest on its debt, what would the people say of Mr. Blake?

Or suppose it was shown that Mr. MacKenzie had, just previous to the recent elections in Ottawa and Lincoln, drawn on the Grand Trunk Railway treasury for $25,000, and absconded with the same, what would the people say of Mr. MacKenzie?

the body to the depth of a few inches, the top being carefully smoothed over with moss and leaves to make the grave look as natural as possible. The body had been taken to the woods in a buggy or wagon, the ground where the horse had stood near by having been pawed. The presence of a freshly broken bough was the means of indicating the whereabouts of the body.

An inquest and a post mortem examination have been held—the former by Messrs Gould and Fyfe, acting as coroners, and the latter by Dr. Willoughby, assisted by Drs. Thorburn, Deans, Douglas, and Richardson. From the evidence it would appear that the girl was about four months advanced in pregnancy, and it is generally supposed that young Mallory was her seducer. When it was found that she was enroute she was induced to visit an old man named Smith, who bears the reputation of being one of the detestable medical specialists who are resorted to in such cases. He had apparently tried mechanical appliances several times, but had failed. One of his attempts appears to have been made a week ago last Tuesday, as a Mrs. Miller stated in evidence that Smith had told her that he had then made the attempt and had failed, but was bound to accomplish it yet. She stated also that an appointment for another attempt had been made for the following Friday evening—that on which Miss Wade was noticed driving with Mallory. It further appears from the evidence that on Friday evening after driving in the direction of Grafton with a young lady. Though the latter has not been positively identified as Miss Wade, the evidence of several witnesses as to her dress, &c., goes to show almost conclusively that it was she. The pair were traced to a hotel in Grafton. Here there is a break in the chain of evidence, but there are good hopes that on the resumption of the inquest on to-day—the missing links will be supplied. The two were noticed at a hotel in Grafton at eight o'clock on Friday evening. The same evening about nine Mallory was seen in Castleton, and it was about one o'clock the next morning when he awoke his father and told him that he had got into a scrape.

Smith, Weldon, and his brother, the last named being, it is supposed, an accessory have been arrested, and are now in custody, and news was received to-day that young Mallory was also apprehended while stopping with some relative in Smith's Creek Michigan. He is in the hands of the United States authorities, and as soon as the usual official steps have been taken he will be brought over.

THE VICTIM, or rather the latest victim, of "Old Dave's" art, Miss Alberta Wade, was the daughter of Mr. John Wade, who lives in Brighton township, a few miles from Castleton. She was educated for a school teacher in Colborne, where she was, in consequence, well known. Her parents and other relations bear the reputation in the neighborhood of intelligent and respectable people, while she herself is invariably spoken of as a charming, handsome, and modest girl against whose character nothing was ever heard previously to the late unhappy affair. Last New Year's she began her experience as a teacher in a country school a short distance from Castleton, and boarded at the house of Mr. Ery E. Mallory, the father of the young man who figures as the seducer in the case. Mr. Mallory, Sr., has the reputation of being a well-living man, and acts as a local preacher in the neighborhood. His son, John Cope Mallory, or, as he is generally called by his acquaintances,

COPE MALLORY,

was a young man of 20 years of age. So far as can be learned he was a rather common place individual, who would not be considered likely to prove attractive to a girl of Miss Wade's attainments. Before he became involved in the present case he was looked upon as a person of tolerably good habits. Though he and Miss Wade were in the habit of attending parties together and going for frequent drives, no suspicion appears to have been entertained by the members of his way, and lying on the main road which runs north from that station through the county of Northumberland. The country in the neighborhood appears to have been settled for a good many years, and the inhabitants—including the Wad Mallory, and Weldon families—are mostly well-to-do farmers. In a wretched little log hut, situated on the top of a hill about half a mile from the village, there has lived for many years back a person generally known in the neighborhood as "Old Dave," or who is now pretty clearly proven to have been one of the principal characters in the tragedy. "Old Dave" is about 56 years of age, and has lived in or near Castleton for the last thirty years. Ostensibly he subsisted on the wages of the odd day work which he was accustomed to perform for the farmers around the village. He wears about as villainous a looking countenance as Providence ever hung on the front of a human being to warn the world against a scoundrel. When speaking his face is distorted into a hideous grim, and his small, twinkling eyes peep out in a cowardly, uncertain kind of way from beneath a pair of bushy eyebrows. In fact a combination of features so indicative of low brutality is seldom met with in real life, and the "make-up" which could successfully counterfeit it on the stage would be a fortune to its wearer. Strange and startling as it may appear this creature has borne in the neighborhood the reputation of a "professional abortionist for years back; and that he has had a good many patients is apparent, not merely from the common talk of the country, but from his own confession and the testimony taken at the inquest, to say nothing of the still more conclusive evidence in the shape of the instruments found in his den. Unlike his brethren who operate in the large cities, he does not pretend to have even an elementary knowledge of medicine in truth he is scarcely able to sign his own name. If the horrible and sickening details of this old villain's modus operandi in his devilish art, as they were obtained from trustworthy sources, and as they are expected to appear in the medical evidence on the resumption of the inquest, were known, they would one would imagine, have the effect of stamping out this evil in Canada, if it did anything under the sun could detect the victims of shame from such desperate resorts. Smith's hut consists of two rooms about eight feet square; his furniture of one rickety chair and a table, a bed made on boards and a few of the simplest kitchen utensils. His shanty does not even boast a stove—a fire-place of the most primitive description doing duty for the purposes of warmth and cookery. He is reported to be a widower, and to have six grown up sons and daughters somewhere in the States. A giving some insight into his character, may be mentioned that the "Mrs. Phynetta Miller," whose evidence is given below, lived with him for years, though for some time back she has been living in a similar relation with another man. Some years ago his den was noted as the resort of abandoned creatures of both sexes.

MRS. PHYNETTA MILLER,

Sworn, said—I was not acquainted with Alberta Wade; never saw her to my knowledge; heard of her disappearance last Tuesday afternoon (29th May). David Smith told me he had been with Alberta Wade and had a trial upon the lady, but without effect; I cannot remember exactly when this conversation took place; it was within the last two weeks he told me he had used an instrument but without effect; he told me that Mallory's son had brought her to see him; he did not tell me what day it was; he told me it was done in the night in McHugh's woods, back of Castleton opposite Smith's house; I asked who was with the lady, and he said Cope Mallory; he said he expected them back the following Friday night about midnight; he spoke of it as a business transaction, and as if he was accustomed to

Sir JOHN McDONALD is not the little god to all the world that he is to his worshippers in Ontario. His admirers in Ontario are never tired of singing psalms of praise to his oratory talents, ability, etc. No matter what nonsense he utters, on a platform, subservient claqueurs give the signal, and the multitude respond in frantic yells of simulated delight. Blasphemy from his mouth becomes to them "a very good joke indeed." His late speech in Toronto at his grand reception, with torch-bearers in the procession, hired to express the burning and spontaneous zeal felt for the great chieftain's glory, at one dollar a head, was a most lamentable failure as a political oration, as buncombe it was an eminent success. But let us get an unbiased opinion from an outsider, a Prince Edward Island paper, for instance, the Patriot, which says—

"Sir John A. Macdonald's speech in Toronto the other day was a rhapsody of brag, bluster and abuse. The report of it that we have seen—the Leader—does not contain a sentence of common sense. That the man who could, on any occasion, utter such wretched stuff should claim to take rank among British statesmen is in the last degree presumptuous. No respectable English politician, with any regard for his reputation, would dream of making such a violent and, in every respect, such an undignified speech as Sir John A. Macdonald, twenty years Premier of Canada, delivered from the balcony of the United Empire Club on the evening of his return to Toronto."

CATECHISM FOR TORIES.

The St. Thomas Journal has arranged the following Catechism, to be answered by the present opposition. Any reader at all acquainted with the political history of the country cannot fail to plainly see the intended real parallel in circumstances, actually brought about by members of the Tory party and the hypothetical questions propounded—

Or suppose it was shown that his Minister of Justice, Mr. Blake, had consented to accept from the Grand Trunk Railway—now indebted to the Government in the sum of $15,142,633.33—a sum of $15,000 by way of contributing to a Blake testimonial, while the railway paid not one farthing of principal or interest on its debt, what would the people say of Mr. Blake?

Or suppose it was shown that Mr. Mackenzie had, just previous to the recent elections in Ottawa and Lincoln, drawn on the Grand Trunk Railway treasury for $25,000, and checked out the full amount for the benefit of Messrs. Norris and Featherstone, what would the Reformers and Tories of Canada say?

Or suppose it was shown that Mr. Blake as Minister of Justice had employed the law firm of Blake, Kerr and Boyd in a number of very important suits before the Supreme and Exchequer Courts, paying for their services out of the public treasury at the rate of $5,000 a year, what would a discerning public think of the transaction?

Or suppose it was shown that the Grand Trunk Railway, after contributing $15,000 to a Blake testimonial, $25,000 to the election expenses of Messrs. Norris and Featherstone, and $200,000 more for the Beverly Robinsons and Col. Cumberland's of the Reform party—suppose it was shown that after making these contributions, without paying a farthing of principal or interest on its large indebtedness to the Dominion, the Government introduced a bill in Parliament authorizing the acceptance of twenty-five cents on the dollar in full and final liquidation of $15,142,633.33, what would the people say about it?

Or suppose it was shown that Mr. Blake in his capacity of Minister of Justice addressed a circular to the poor occupants on Ordnance Lands, calling upon them forthwith to pay up all sums in arrears and remit to him a fee of $2.50 for expenses, contrary to all law,—and suppose Mr. Blake pocketed from this source $545 while in receipt of his stated salary as Minister of Justice, what would honorable men without distinction of party think of his conduct?

Or suppose it was shown that upon Mr. Mackenzie's resignation of the office of Treasurer of Ontario he withdrew from the public treasury the sum of $32,000 and placed it to the credit of his private account in the bank; and suppose that two years afterwards, without the consent or knowledge of Mr. Crooks, he paid out $6,000 of this sum to a personal and political friend, secretly restoring the balance to the treasury but refusing to account for the $6,000,—what would the people say, and how much confidence could they place in Mr. Mackenzie as an honest man?

Before he became involved in the present case he was looked upon as a person of tolerably good habits. Though he and Miss Wade were in the habit of attending parties together and going for frequent drives, no suspicion appears to have been entertained by the members of his family that there was an improper intimacy between them until a short time before the young lady's disappearance. The general opinion was that they were "keeping company"—as the phrase goes—and that they were likely soon to be married. Another prominent party in the case is

MARVEN WELDON,

A married man, aged 28, and an intimate friend of young Mallory. His reputation in the neighborhood is that he was not particularly noted for his marital fidelity—a fact which, taken with his intimacy with Cope Mallory, is regarded here as an explanation of his connection with the case. He was arrested but lodged in Cobourg gaol, on the strength of

DAVE SMITH'S CONFESSION

made to Constable Casey the previous night when "Dave" was being conveyed to gaol. Smith, has all along taken his position very coolly, or rather with the greatest indifference, either because he is too ignorant to comprehend it, or, more likely, is so hardened as to have survived even the sensation of fear. His confession is substantially that Weldon and Mallory arranged with him that on Tuesday night the 22nd of May they should bring Miss Wade with them for the purpose of having an operation performed on her; that on the appointed night the three parties came, but that his attempts to procure an abortion on that occasion failed. For some reason or other—perhaps because they were apprehensive of discovery if they went to his hut—the grove which lies east of and at some distance from his den was made the rendezvous of the party. That night an appointment was made for the following Friday night—the evening it should be borne in mind, on which Miss Wade was last seen alive. Smith states that on the Friday night shortly before midnight, Weldon and the young lady came to his hut. All the sickening details, which the old villain related with the utmost coolness and particularity, need not be repeated here; suffice it to say that while he was performing the operation Weldon noticed the poor girl stamping out this evil in Canada, deed anything under the sun could the victims of shame from such des resorts. Smith's hut consists of rooms about eight feet square; his two of one rickety chair and a table, made on boards and a few of the sin kitchen utensils. ARREST OF THE MURDERERS.

COLBORNE, Ont., June 1.—A fearful crime was committed in the little country village of Castleton a few days since. The victim, Miss Alberta Wade, was a daughter of John Wade, of Brighton township, and was engaged as school teacher in the neighborhood of Castleton. She had been seen of her alive was on Friday evening of last week, when she was noticed driving with a young man named Mallory, the son of a farmer in the neighborhood. About one o'clock that night young Mallory returned home alone, and informed his father that he had lost money, as he had got into a rape which would oblige him to leave the country; that he had seduced a young lady; and on his father advising him to marry her he stated that he could not, as she had gone. After securing what money he could he drove to Colborne, where he bought a second-class ticket for Detroit. By some means the father was that Miss Wade was missing, and did not reach his father's house until last Sunday. A search was instituted, but not until Thursday morning last was her body discovered. It was found in a lonely dell, in a low swampy place in the woods about a quarter of a mile from Mallory's farm, and about three miles from Castleton. It had been thrown into a hole apparently scraped out with a hoe, and when it was found all her clothes, except her drawers which were tightly drawn around her head and neck. A covering of loose earth, leaves, brush, &c., was thrown over the body to the depth of a few inches, the earth being carefully smoothed over with moss and leaves to make the grave look as natural as possible. The body had been taken to the woods in a buggy or wagon, the ground where the horse had stood near by having been pawed. The presence of a freshly broken bough was a means of indicating the whereabouts of the body.

An inquest and a post mortem examination have been held—the former by Messrs Gould and Effe, acting as coroners, and the latter by Dr. Willoughby, assisted by Drs. Thorburn, Deans, Douglas, and Richardson. From the evidence would appear that the girl was about four months advanced in pregnancy, and is generally supposed that young Mallory was her seducer. When it was found that she was enroute she was induced to visit an old man named Smith, who bears the reputation of being one of the detestable medical specialists who resorted to in such cases. He had apparently tried mechanical appliances several times, but had failed. One of his attempts appears to have been made a week ago last Tuesday, as a Mrs. Miller stated in evidence that Smith had told her that he had then made the attempt and had failed, but was bound to accomplish it yet. She stated also that an appointment for another attempt had been made for the following Friday evening—that on which Miss Wade was noticed driving with Mallory. It further appears from the evidence that on Friday evening after driving in the direction of Grafton with a young lady. Though the latter is not been positively identified as Miss Wade, the evidence of several witnesses as to her dress, &c., goes to show almost conclusively that it was she. The pair were traced to a hotel in Grafton. Here there is a break in the chain of evidence, as there are good hopes that on the resumption of the inquest on to day—the missing links will be supplied. The two were noticed at a hotel in Grafton at give two or three gasps, and then, as he imagined, she fainted away. The two attempted to restore her to consciousness, but soon the horrible truth dawned upon their minds that she was dead. They both became alarmed, Weldon, according to Smith's story being so terrified that he seemed incapable of word or act. On Smith asking him, after a few minutes had elapsed, what he proposed to do, Weldon said he would go and bring Cope Mallory. He went out for that purpose, and returned in ten or fifteen minutes bringing Mallory with him. According to this statement it would appear either that Mallory was waiting a short distance off (probably in the woods on the other side of the road, where Weldon had left the buggy), or that he had been behind hand in his appointment at the hut, and was on the way there when Weldon met him. The two young men carried the body across the three fields that lie between Smith's shanty and the road running north from Castleton. Smith gathered from the conversation between the parties that the horse and buggy was standing in the grove on the other side of the road. Smith's confession, so far as it affects the case at present, ends here, but he hinted vaguely that there was "another party" mixed up in the affair, though he refused to reveal the name.

Miss Wade's parents live at a considerable distance from where she was teaching, and did not hear of her absence for several days, and when they did learn the news it was in the shape of a rumor that she and Cope Mallory had run away. Suspicion that this was not the true state of affairs first arose from finding that the girl had left in her room all her clothes except those she had on, and her jewelry.

Castleton is a straggling little village some six or seven miles north of Colborne station, on the Grand Trunk Railway, and lying on the main road which runs north from that station through the county of Northumberland. The country in the neighborhood appears to have been settled for a good many years, and the inhabitants—including the Wade, Mallory, and Weldon families—are mostly well-to-do farmers. In a wretched little log hut, situated on the top of a hill about half a mile from the village, there has lived for many years back a person generally known in the neighborhood as "Old Dave," or who is now pretty clearly proven to have been one of the principal characters in the tragedy. "Old Dave" is about 56 years of age, and has lived in or near Castleton for the last thirty years. Ostensibly he subsisted on the wages of the odd days' work which he was accustomed to perform for the farmers around the village. He wears about as villainous a looking countenance as Providence ever hung on the front of a human being to warn the world against a scoundrel. When speaking his face is distorted into a hideous grimace, and his small, twinkling eyes peer out in a cowardly, uncertain kind of a way from beneath a pair of busy eyebrows. In fact a combination of features so indicative of low brutality is seldom met with in real life, and the "make-up" which could successfully counterfeit it on the stage would be a fortune to its wearer. Strange and startling as it may appear, this creature has borne in the neighborhood the reputation of a "professional" abortionist for years back; and that he has had a good many patients is apparent, not merely from the common talk of the country, but from his own confession and the testimony taken at the inquest, to say nothing of the still more conclusive evidence in the shape of the instruments found in his den. Unlike his brethren who operate in the large cities, he does not pretend to have even an elementary knowledge of medicine.

...evidence that Smith had told her he had then made the attempt failed, but was bound to accept it yet. She stated also that an attempt for another attempt had been made for the following Friday evening on which Miss Wade was noticed with Mallory. It further appears evidence that on Friday evening in the direction of Grafton young lady. Though the latter had been positively identified as Miss Wade evidence of several witnesses, dress, &c., goes to show almost every that it was she. The pair went to a hotel in Grafton. Here a break in the chain of evidence, there are good hopes that on the return of the inquest on to day—the links will be supplied. The two tied at a hotel in Grafton at about on Friday evening. The evening about nine Mallory was Castleton, and it was about one the next morning when he awoke and told him that he had got rapped.

Weldon, and his brother, the last being, it is supposed, an accessory when arrested, and are now in custody news was received to-day that Mallory was also apprehended together with some relative in Creek Michigan. He is in the of the United States authorities, soon as the usual official steps are taken he will be brought over.

THE VICTIM,
For the latest victim, of "Old Hart," Miss Alberta Wade, was daughter of Mr. John Wade, who Brightton township, a few miles west of Castleton. She was educated for a teacher in Colborne, where she consequently, well known. Her and other relations bear the reputation in the neighborhood of intelligent respectable people, while she is invariably spoken of as a charming, and modest girl against character nothing was ever heard of to the late unhappy affair. Few years she began her experience as a teacher in a country school a stance from Castleton, and boarded house of Mr. Fry E. Mallory, father of the young man who figures prominently in the case. Mr. Mallory, the reputation of being a well-man, and acts as a local preacher neighborhood. His son, John Mallory, or, as he is generally known by his acquaintances,

COPE MALLORY,
Young man of 20 years of age. So much he learned he was a rather a place individual, who would not be likely to prove attractive of Miss Wade's attainments. Because involved in the present was looked upon as a person of good habits. Though he and she were in the habit of attending together and going for frequent no suspicion appears to have been on the part of the members of his that there was an improper intention them until a short time before the young lady's disappearance. The opinion was that they were "going company"—as the phrase goes that they were likely soon to be married. Another prominent party in this

MARVEN WELDON,
A young man, aged 28, and an intimate friend of young Mallory. His reputation in the neighborhood is that he was not only noted for his marital fidelity, but which, taken with the fact that Cope Mallory is regarded as an explanation of his connection with the case. He was arrested by the Colborne gail, on the strength

DAVE SMITH'S CONFESSION

Constable Casey the previous night "Dave" was being conveyed to Smith, has all along taken his very cool, or rather with the indifference, either because he is unable to comprehend it, or, more out in a cowardly, uncertain kind of a way from beneath a pair of busy eyebrows. In fact a combination of features so indicative of low brutality is seldom met with in real life, and the "make-up" which could successfully counterfeit it on the stage would be a fortune to its wearer. Strange and startling as it may appear, this creature has borne in the neighborhood the reputation of a "professional" abortionist for years back; and that he has had a good many patients is apparent, not merely from the common talk of the country, but from his own confession and the testimony taken at the inquest, to say nothing of the still more conclusive evidence in the shape of the instruments found in his den. Unlike his brethren who operate in the large cities, he does not pretend to have even an elementary knowledge of medicine; in truth he is scarcely able to sign his own name. If the horrible and sickening details of this old villain's modus operandi in his devilish art, as they were obtained from trustworthy sources, and as they are expected to appear in the medical evidence on the resumption of the inquest, were known, they would, one would imagine, have the effect of stamping out this evil in Canada. Indeed anything under the sun could deter the victims of shame from such desperate resorts. Smith's hut consists of two rooms about eight feet square; his furniture of one rickety chair and a table, a bed made on boards and a few of the simplest kitchen utensils. His shanty does not even boast a stove—a fire-place of the most primitive description doing duty for the purposes of warmth and cooking. He is reported to be a widower, and to have six grown-up sons and daughters somewhere in the States. As giving some insight into his character, it may be mentioned that the "Mrs. Phynetta Miller," whose evidence is given below, lived with him for years, though for some time back she has been living in a similar relation with another man. Some years ago his den was noted as the resort of abandoned creatures of both sexes.

MRS. PHYNETTA MILLER,

Sworn, said—I was not acquainted with Alberta Wade; never saw her to my knowledge; heard of her disappearance last Tuesday afternoon (29th May); David Smith told me he had been with Alberta Wade and had a trial upon the lady, but without effect; I cannot remember exactly when this conversation took place; it was within the last two weeks; he told me he had used an instrument, but without effect; he told me that Mallory's son had brought her to see him; he did not tell me what day it was; he told me it was done in the night in McHugh's woods, back of Castleton, opposite Smith's house; I asked who was with the lady, and he said Cope Mallory; he said he expected them back the following Friday night about midnight; he spoke of it as a business transaction, and as if he was accustomed to perform such operations; he has often spoken to me before of having performed such operations. I saw Smith operate on a young girl some years ago; I had some conversation with Marvin lately, I asked him if he heard of the death of Alberta Wade; he said "Yes;" I asked him if he thought it was true; he said he was afraid it was; Smith's trunk was brought down to my place by a little boy; I never opened it; I gave it up to the foreman of the jury; I understood from conversation with Smith that the operation was for the purpose of causing abortion; I have seen the instruments used by Smith; have seen the ones produced at Smith's; he told me one of them was for the purpose of blowing air into the womb; I do not think that was the one used upon Miss Wade; the tube covered with leather is the one used for blowing air into the womb.

The evidence of Mallory's father mother, sister and over a dozen witnesses seemed to indicate the guilt of the arrested parties. The result of the inquest is which was adjourned till next Monday not yet made public.

Artificial-Fish Breeding.
The Belleville Intelligencer says:— We have cheering intelligence from the Trent and the upper part of the Moira, in which rivers Mr. Wilkins, our active fishery overseer, has deposited within a few years many thousands of salmon fry from the Government fish-breeding establishment at Newcastle. A considerable number of good-sized young salmon have been captured in both the rivers named, and there seems now good ground for hoping that the project of re-stocking their waters with the salmon—that most valuable of all fish—will be successful. A very large number of fry are now being distributed from the Newcastle breeding establishment, in the appointment of which we hope that the Moira and Trent will not be overlooked; and further we would suggest that if a considerable number of trout and fry could be spared for the trout creeks in this vicinity the benefit would be great. The Department ought to take action to this end.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.
 Consumption, that scourge of humanity, is the great dread of the human family, in all civilized countries.
 I feel confident that I am in possession of the only sure, infallible Remedy—how known to the profession—for the positive and speedy cure of that dread disease, and its unwelcome accompaniments, viz: CATARRH, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, NER-VOUS DEBILITY, &c., &c. Twenty-eight years experience as a busy practitioner, in the best Consumption Hospitals of the Old and New World, has taught me the value of this Medicine
 in the cure of all Throat and Lung Complaints.
 Those suffering with consumption or any of the above maladies, by addressing me, giving symptoms, they shall be put in possession of this great boon, WITHOUT CHARGE, and shall have the benefit of my experience in thousands of cases successfully treated. Full directions for preparation and use, and all necessary advice and instructions for successful treatment at your own home, will be received by you by return mail, free of charge, by addressing

WELLAND
Canal Enlargement.
Notice to Contractors.

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the undersigned, and endorsed "Tenders for the Welland Canal," will be received at this office until the arrival of the Eastern and Western mails on THURSDAY, the 5th day of JULY next, for the formation of a new line of canal from Marlatt's Pond, at Thorold, to Allanburg, including the construction of a lift lock, guard lock, several culverts and piers and abutments for swing
 bridges, &c.
 Also, the enlargement of about two miles of the canal, from the Junction downward, together with the construction of an Aqueduct over the Hippawa River, a lock between the canal and the river at Welland, piers and abutments for bridges, &c.
 And, the enlargement of the canal from Ramey's Bend to Port Colborne, including the construction of a guard lock, weir, and supply race, &c.
 The works will be let in sections of a length suited to circumstances and the locality.
 Maps of the different localities, together with plans and specifications of the works can be seen at this office on and after MONDAY, the 25th day of June next, where printed forms relative to the works north of Allanburg, can be seen at the resident Engineer's office, THOROLD; and for works south of Port Robinson, plans, &c., may be seen at the resident Engineer's office, WEL-LAND.
 Contractors are requested to bear in mind that Tenders will not be considered, unless made strictly in accordance with the printed forms, and—in the case of firms—except there are attached the actual signatures, the nature of the occupation and place of residence of each member of the same; and further, an accepted bank cheque or other available security for the sum of from one to five thousand dollars, according to the extent of work on the section, must accompany each Tender, which sum shall be forfeited
 if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the works at the rates stated in the offer submitted.
 The amount required in each case will be stated
 on the form of Tender.
 The cheque or money thus sent in will be returned to the respective contractors whose Tenders are not accepted.
 For the due fulfillment of the contract, satisfactory security will be required, by the deposit of money to the amount of five per cent. on the bulk sum of the contract, of which the sum sent in with the Tender will be considered a part.
 Ninety per cent. only of the progress estimates
 will be paid until the completion of the work.
 To each Tender must be attached the actual signatures of two responsible and solvent persons, residents of the Township, willing to become sureties for the carrying out of these conditions
 as well as the due performance of the works embraced in the contract.
 This Department does not, however, bind itself
 to accept the lowest or any Tender.
 By order,
F. BRAUN,
 Secretary.

Notice to Subscribers

As a misunderstanding with some of our subscribers, has arisen in regard to the meaning conveyed by the wording of certain circulars, sent to them by Mr. T. W. Casey, late proprietor of the EXPRESS, asking for payment of arrears of subscriptions. We wish it distinctly understood, that Mr. Casey's connection with the EXPRESS, expired on the 16th day of October 1876, and all subscriptions due him, expired with that date. We hope that our subscribers will not infer from the said circulars, that we are, at this early date, pushing them for their subscriptions.

THE EXPRESS.

NAPANEE, JUNE, 8th 1877.

Who does your cutting now?
We beg leave to say that Mr. Hogan, does not cut for any other firm but ourselves.

Accident.

Two of Hon. R. J. Cartwright's children were severely injured by falling out of a hammock at Kingston, on Tuesday. One of the two, a little girl, sustained a fracture of the collar bone, and great uneasiness is felt with respect to her condition. The other, a little boy, had his thigh broken. Mr. Cartwright, left Ottawa for Kingston on hearing of the accident. The children are now out of danger.

Sad News.

We record to-day, the, death of Dr. Switzer, an man of great popularity, and kindness of heart, and who was buried at Clarks Mills on Thursday. Also Miss Lydia Webster who died in Kingston. Her remains were brought to Napanee for interment, being followed from the station by a large number of acquaintances who highly esteemed the many good qualities of the deceased. Her funeral takes place to-day, (Friday,) at 2 p. m.

Church Dedication.

The new Methodist Church on the Selby circuit will be opened and dedicated to-day (Friday), June 8th. The Rev. W. S. Blackstock will preach the opening sermon at 2 o'clock p. m., after which he will be assisted in the usual dedicatory services by the Revs. A. A. Smith and W. Bryden. Tea will be served at 5 o'clock p. m., admission, 40 cents. At 6 o'clock a public meeting will be held at which addresses will be delivered by the above gentlemen and Rev. S. Might. The choir of the Selby church will be in attendance.

Seeing the Elephant

A young swell from Napanee who parts his hair a-mid ship, was, in company with his "Juliet," gazing in open-mouthed wonder at Barnum's curiosities in Belleville. A pleasant looking gentleman wearing gold rimmed specs, gently stepped up, saying, "My dear sir, allow me to show you the elephant, you will observe, that when he opens his mouth, he shuts his eyes—see" (watch disappears from Bill's pocket.) The act was detected by Juliet, who gave a tremulous scream, but it was too late, the man of sin had disappeared from view.

Shipping News—Sail Ho

A strange vessel how in sight last Friday, steadily beating up the creek with a heavy sea on her larboard gang-way. Old "salties" who frequent our docks, after vainly endeavoring to make out her lines, settled a fresh quid abaft their eye teeth, and shook their heads ominously, thinking, no doubt, that the spirit of Capt. Kidd, was paying us a visit, while friend Shipman rushed to the swing bridge to admit the strange craft to a safe anchorage. A familiar face now appeared at the fore-castle hatch, which proved to be our old friend, Capt. David Mills, who has again taken to a seafaring life, and secured possession of a "fore-an-after," blessed with the romantic name of Jane Maw. Well, we wish David and Jane all the luck in the world, to which every

A FATAL FIRE.

(From the Newburgh Reporter.)

On Monday night last week, Alexander Snider, a farmer living two miles south-east of Piccadilly and about 18 miles from here, built a fire outside of his house to keep away the mosquitoes. During the hours of sleeping, the fire spread and caught in the building itself, a large frame one which was entirely consumed. Out of seven children, two

THE CITY OF BRANTFORD

ENTHUSIASTIC INAUGURAL CELEBRATION.

BRANTFORD, May 31.—Brantford, Thursday, took its place as a city of Ontario. The loud bells at day-break announced habitants that they had entered new career in their history. A 6 o'clock special train brought a host of visitors who had generously consented to contribute to the demonstrations. At each of the stations guests were met by reception committees and escorted to the rendezvous market square. When all had arrived the arrangements of getting order were completed, the procession started at about 11:45 through the principal streets of the city. The course of the procession was imposing as possible by a plentiful play of flags, bunting, and other decorations. The procession was extremely large, containing about 2,000 firemen, sixteen or eighteen bands of music, several cavalry troops, and rifle. The rear was brought up by the sion of trades in active operation of the principal manufacturers presented as well as the whole retail houses of the city. Potter were seen turning their wheels and up beautiful pots from the lumps of clay; cigar makers were glory; printing presses were forth a stream of bills and small tins; marble-cutters, blacksmiths, carriage-makers, and others made up a spectacle rarely seen. When the procession had finished round assigned for them they were ducted to the drill-shed, where a dinner was provided for the Among those who partook of the ality of Brantford, besides the 1 of firemen, were the mayors and lora of about twenty different towns. After dinner the procession formed and marched to the fair where the Mayor read the inaugural address;—

After this speeches were delivered by the Mayors of Hamilton, St. Catharines, Woodstock, Guelph, and Tilsonburgh, and other prominent sons.

While the speeches were being delivered a lacrosse match was entered the Sour Spring Indians and the dagas. Owing to the close competition money was divided, neither claiming off the prize. The war dance of the attractions of the day.

At 7.30 p. m. about two thousand men formed in line for the torchlight procession. After marching through principal streets they proceeded to fair ground, where a magnificent fireworks was exhibited, thus one of the liveliest days ever in Brantford.

GEN. GRANT IN ENGLAND.

HIS RECEPTION BY ROYALTY.

NEW YORK, June 2.—General Grant formally introduced to the Prince of Wales yesterday, and invited by him to go to Epsom. At Victoria Station Prince of Wales and Duke of Cambridge occupied a compartment with General Grant. He is expected to go to Windsor to visit Her Majesty.

NEW YORK, June 3.—The Prince of Wales gave Gen. Grant a private audience at Marlborough House yesterday introducing him to his household. Queen has ordered the Lord Chamberlain to extend to the General and Grant invitations to all Court entertainments. The General was entertained at a banquet at Apsley House by the Lord Wellington last night.

LONDON, June 4.—Gen. Grant arrived at Westminster Abbey for services.

Prentice Boy's

The Grand Lodge of Prentice Boy's of B. N. A. will be held at Belleville, on Tuesday next, 12th of June.

Rev. C. Hartley.

Will occupy the pulpit on Sunday morning next in the M. E. Church, subject of discourse "Things seen and unseen."

"The Pioneer."

With a crew of four visited Barnum at Belleville on Tuesday. Previous to the departure Prof Hulett secured a very good picture.

New Steamer.

It is probable that Capt. Collier of the defunct Norfolk will shortly purchase a new steamer, and place her on the old route.

Counterfeit Bills.

Several of the counterfeit bills on the Bank of Pontiac, Mich., which were circulated last summer have again turned up. The detectives are on the look out for the issuers.

Honours.

Mr. Donald C. McHenry, M. A., Principal of the Cobourg Collegiate Institute, and formerly a tyro of Napanee, has been elected 1st Vice-President of the Alumni Association of the Victoria University.

Successful.

Mr. W. Wilson, a graduate of our High School, and now articled in Messrs Reeve & Morden's law office passed his primary examination at Toronto very creditably.

The June Fair.

At this time of the year our farmers, and others are generally busy, and their time is precious. Hence the turnout on Tuesday was not equal to an ordinary busy Saturday.

Runaway.

A span of horses belonging to Mr. Files of Newburgh ran away on Saturday evening. The vehicle was demolished, and Mr. Files was bruised but not seriously.

The Cricket Match.

Owing to want of practice, and being unprepared for the occasion, the Napanee Club was beaten in Kingston, scoring in two innings, 79. Kingston, one innings 208.

Removal of Toll Gates.

In the Kingston City Council, the special committee's report recommends a request to the County Council to follow the example of Lennox and Addington, and remove the toll gates on the Kingston road, within the County of Frontenac.

"Never Too Late to Mend."

Don't forget the Dramatic entertainment in the Music Hall to night. Mr. John Robinson, Mr. Brink and a first class company of amateur and professional talent, will doubtless draw an overflowing house. Admission 15 and 25 cents.

The Workingman's Temperance Association.

Will hold an open meeting, on Wednesday evening next, 15th inst., at the Town Hall. The public are cordially invited to attend. Speeches by the Workingmen and others.

The "Armenia."

"We learn that the steamer Armenia has withdrawn from the Belleville route, and will ply upon Burlington Bay in future, making trips from Hamilton to the various pleasure resorts near that city on the Bay route. The City of Kingston has been chartered to ply on this route." Kingston News.

Barnum.

Quite a crowd assembled at the Station, early on Tuesday morning, expecting to see the elephant riding on a platform car, a report to that effect having been circulated by a wag about town. Those who missed the animal in Napanee, saw him at Belleville, returning highly pleased with the exhibition.

6 o'clock a public meeting will be held at which addresses will be delivered by the above gentlemen and Rev. S. Might. The choir of the Selby church will be in attendance.

Seeing the Elephant.

A young swell from Napanee who parts his hair a-mid ship, was, in company with his "Juliet," gazing in open-mouthed wonder at Barnum's curiosities in Belleville. A pleasant looking gentleman wearing gold rimmed spectacles stepped up, saying, "My dear sir, allow me to show you the elephant, you will observe, that when he opens his mouth, he shuts his eyes—see" (watch disappears from Bill's pocket.) The act was detected by Juliet, who gave a tremendous scream, but it was too late, the man of sin had disappeared from view.

Shipping News—Sail Ho.

A strange vessel hove in sight last Friday, steadily beating up the creek with a heavy sea on her larboard gang-way. Old "salties" who frequent our docks, after vainly endeavoring to make out her lines, settled a fresh quid abaft their eye teeth, and shook their heads ominously, thinking, no doubt, that the spirit of Capt. Kidd, was paying us a visit, while friend Shipman rushed to the swing bridge to admit the strange craft to a safe anchorage. A familiar face now appeared at the fore-castle hatch, which proved to be our old friend, Capt. David Mills, who has again taken to a seafaring life, and secured possession of a "fore-and-after," blessed with the romantic name of Jane Mann. Well, we wish David and Jane all the luck in the world, to which every sailor in port will echo—three times three. Jane is 50 ft. keel, 11 ft. beam, and 4 ft. depth of hold. She hails from Oakville. is a piratical-looking craft, and has doubtless been a "blockade runner." After a complete refitting, which is now in progress, she will compete with the steamer Shannon in the race for public patronage.

THE ACADEMY ATHLETICS.

The first exhibition of the Napanee Academy Athletic Association, was held on Saturday on the Academy grounds. A large number of parents, pupils, and others were present. The feats of strength and agility elicited great applause, the male teachers competing with the rest. Master Kenneth Huff, who is as supple as an eel, was the recipient of a special prize. After the exercises, all adjourned to the High School, where they were addressed by Messrs Barrows, Matheson, Blackstock and Lane. The prizes were then presented by Inspector Barrows, with appropriate remarks, as follows:

During the hours of sleeping, the fire spread and caught in the building itself, a large frame one which was entirely consumed. Out of seven children, two aged four and eight, who were sleeping by themselves in an upper room were burned to death. One little girl who jumped from an upper window is so badly burned that recovery is doubtful. Mrs. Snider was severely injured in her attempt to rescue her children, a neighbor who assisted was also very badly burned. Loss on house $1,500 Insurance $300.

A SAD ACCIDENT.

KILLED WHILE WATCHING HOLIDAY SPORTS.

At the athletic games at Cornwall on the Queen's Birthday, Mr. R. R. McLennan, the champion hammer thrower of the world, after repeated solicitations from a number of those present to give an exhibition of his power and skill as a hammer thrower, decided to accede to their requests. Several parties were sent out to warn the crowd to keep back, and everything being announced in readiness, Mr. McLennan took up the hammer a twelve-pounder we are informed, and after swinging around with it five or six times, sent it spinning through the air a distance of about three hundred feet. As soon as the hammer left his hand all eyes were turned in the direction in which it was going, as it was evident it would fall in the crowd at the south-west corner of the field. The people at the end of the field were seen making every effort to get out of the way, but alas! they were not all able to escape. A shriek of horror went up from the crowd when the hammer was seen alighting among them and striking a young girl. All rushed to the spot fearing that it was a daughter, sister, or some friend that had been crushed beneath the hammer. It was soon made known that the victim was a daughter of Michael Kavanaugh. The ball struck her on the back of the head completely, smashed in her skull. Those who were near by say the girl never moved a muscle after the hammer struck her. The blood poured out of her mouth, nose, eyes, and ears. She was about thirteen years of age, and had lately commenced to work in the cotton mill. She was a great help to her parents, who are poor. She was taken home by her father and uncle. Her parents have the sympathy of the public in their sad bereavement. The tears poured down poor McLennan's cheeks when he was informed that the girl was killed. Of course no blame could possible be attached to him, as he was only an actor, and the first time referred to a committee of the whole, the Reeve in the chair. The committee arose and the chairman reported the by-law with amendments. Report received and adopted. The by-law was then read a third time and passed. Moved by Mr. James, seconded by Mr. Herring, that one hundred be printed and distributed—lost on the following division—Yeas, Fradick, Herring, James, Lane, Roe, and the Mayor—6.

Queen has ordered the Lord Chamberlain to extend to the General and Grant invitations to all Court entertainments. The General was entertained at banquet at Apsley House by the Duke of Wellington last night.

LONDON, June 4.—Gen. Grant attended services at Westminster Abbey yesterday, and listened to a sermon by Dean Stanley. After alluding to great and irreparable loss two nations had sustained in the decease of Mr. Motley, the reverend gentleman the course of his sermon, said Gen. Grant has just laid down the scepter of the American commonwealth, having by military power and still more by the gentle treatment of his comrades in victory his enemies in defeat, restored unity and great and divided people. England welcomes him as a sign and pledge the two nations of Anglo-Saxon race still one in heart and spirit.

SUICIDE OF A CLERGYMAN

The Rev. W. R. Morden, a Baptist Church Minister, suicided with a revolver in the street in London Ont. at 11 o'clock on the 1st inst. On the person of deceased were found certain writ among which were the following sentence—"Almighty and everlasting God, Heavenly Father, accept the sacrifice which to The I bring, and let my wrathful indignation pass away from entire world, and especially from Thee, my ancient spouse, the Catholic Church give all repentance unto me; I see not only for mine own sins but for errors of all of the people." And him he said, behold I have caused iniquity to pass from thee, Zech. i. "Because I lay down my life it might take it again no man can take it me, but I lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This command have I received from my Father, x. 17-18." Another sentence was to effect that his body should not be buried and that a certain ring should not be removed from his finger. An inquest held when a verdict was rendered suicide while in a fit of temporary insanity. Morden had a sunstroke years ago from which he never recovered.

The Prince of Wales and the Loyal Victualers.

At the annual dinner of the Loyal Victualers held in London (Eng.) 3 days since the Prince of Wales was in chair, and in the course of the few remarks in which he acknowledged the to-morrow loyal toasts, he said—"I state that during the last two or three days I have received some two hundred petitions from various parts of the United Kingdom relative to my attendance

Mr. Files was bruised but not seriously.

The Cricket Match.

Owing to want of practice, and being unprepared for the occasion, the Napanee Club was beaten in Kingston, scoring in two innings, 79, Kingston, one innings 208.

Removal of Toll Gates.

Those who missed the animal in Napanee, saw him at Belleville, returning highly pleased with the exhibition.

Improvement.

Hon. Mr. Cartwright has given permission to remove the fence around the Crystal Palace grounds, the Agricultural Society and the town will share the expense. A sidewalk will afterwards be built from the bridge to the Clarksville road.

Postponed Challenge.

The base ball match between the Clippers of Belleville and Silver Leafs of Napanee has been postponed. The Leafs are desirous of leaving for the Flights of Newburgh or any other junior club under eighteen years.

Lamp Smashers.

All the members of the celebrated "Clapper" family have been arrested for target practice. Stone-throwing seems to be their favourite amusement, and they only miss a fellow's head, to hit a gas lamp. Chief Allen will have them before the police court on Saturday morning.

The Granger's Pic-Nic.

The third anniversary of the Dominion Grange Patrons of Husbandry, was celebrated by their annual pic-nic at Napanee Mills on Saturday last. The procession formed at Newburgh and headed by the Napanee Band marched to Peter Miller's grove, where every accommodation had been provided. Each Grange had their own table, and although over 4,000 attended, yet the supply of refreshments was ample, and the hospitality and cordial feeling toward strangers and invited guests was a subject of general remark. After a short delay by a shower of rain, speeches were made by Messrs. Daly, Shirley, Price, Neville, Elliott, Clark and others. After which the band played "God Save the Queen," and the immense crowd dispersed. Napanee was full of visitors and wore a holiday aspect. The festivities of the occasion will be remembered with pleasure, both by the Grangers and their friends from a distance.

THE ACADEMY KILN.

The first exhibition of the Napanee Academy Athletic Association, was held on Saturday on the Academy grounds. A large number of parents, pupils, and others were present. The feats of strength and agility elicited great applause, the male teachers competing with the rest. Master Kenneth Hull, who is as supple as an eel, was the recipient of a special prize. The tears poured down poor McLennan's cheeks when he was informed that the girl was killed. Of course no blame could possibly be attached to him. He had not been in the habit of throwing the hammer for some years, and had very little idea of the distance or direction it would go. Had it gone in the direction that he intended, it might not have reached the crowd. We think, however, that the committee who had charge of the grounds should have made the circle larger, as it was evident to those looking on that had McLennan given the hammer that force it was in his power to do he would have sent it beyond the bounds of the circle. However, it is, but fair to the committee to state that had the spectators kept outside of the circle the accident would not have happened, as the poor girl was five or six feet inside of the rope when the hammer struck her. The chairman of the committee immediately after the accident announced that the games were closed.

American Arms for Turkey.

At the present time there are twenty-six Turkish officers at the Providence, R. I., gun factories who visit the works every day and minutely examine every gun before it is packed away to ship to Turkey. They are termed inspectors. The managing inspector, General Teofil Pasha, a prominent officer of the Turkish army, has been here ever since the contract was entered into, in accordance with the terms of the contract. The other inspectors appeal to him on all matters upon which they are in doubt as to the finish, &c., of the guns, and he in turn communicates with the Tool Company or the United States Government. There are also fifty American inspectors at the works, at the request of the Turkish Government. They are sent from the Springfield Armory by order of the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance at Washington, but they are paid for their services by the Turkish Government.

At the annual dinner of the Licens Victuallers held in London (Eng.) a f days since the Prince of Wales was in t chair, and in the course of the few marks in which he acknowledged the customary loyal toasts, he said:—"I m state that during the last two or th days I have received some two hund petitions from various parts of the Unit Kingdom relative to my attendance h this evening. Of course I don't wish say a word to disparage these societ which no doubt have excellent object view, but I think in this instance th have overshot the mark. The object our meeting here to night is not to courage the love of drink, but rather support a good and excellent charity. can only say I am sure that all here v agree with me that no one had more heart the interests of his adopted coun than my lamented father, and I feel p feely convinced that he would ne have been the patron of this society i less he was sure that it was one likely to do good and was deserving of his support."

In a similar spirit of good natured proof, Lord Granville remarked that had been solemnly warned not to risk popularity by publicly associating hims with those monsters of iniquity the censured Victuallers, and had replied th in any case, he should attend the dinn if it were only to see three hundred m sters of iniquity pleasantly assembled gether to promote a work of genu charity and benevolence.

THE CITY OF BRANTFORD.

ENTHUSIASTIC INAUGURAL CELEBRATION.

BRANTFORD, May 31.—Brantford today, Thursday, took its place among the cities of Ontario. The loud ringing of bells at day-break announced to the inhabitants that they had entered upon a new career in their history. After eight o'clock special trains brought thousands of visitors who had generously consented to contribute to the day's ceremonies. At each of the stations the guests were met by reception committees, and escorted to the rendezvous on the market square. When all had arrived and the arrangements of getting them in order were completed, the procession started at about 11:45 through the principal streets of the city. The entire course of the procession was made as imposing as possible by a plentiful display of flags, bunting, and other decorations. The procession was exceedingly large, containing about 2,000 firemen, and sixteen or eighteen bands of music, with several cavalry troops, and rifle brigades. The rear was brought up by the procession of trades in active operation. Most of the principal manufacturers were represented as well as the wholesale and retail houses of the city. Potters were to be seen turning their wheels and finishing up beautiful pots from the unsightly lumps of clay; cigar makers were in their glory; printing presses were pouring forth a stream of bills and small advertisements; marble-cutters, coopers, blacksmiths, carriage-makers, and many others made up a spectacle rarely seen.

When the procession had finished the round assigned for them they were conducted to the drill-shed, where an ample dinner was provided for the guests. Among those who partook of the hospitality of Brantford, besides the hundreds of firemen, were the mayors and councillors of about twenty different cities and towns. After dinner the procession reformed and marched to the fair ground, where the Mayor read the inaugural address.

After this speeches were delivered by the Mayors of Hamilton, St. Catharines, Stratford, Woodstock, Guelph, Mitchell, Tilsonburgh, and other prominent persons.

While the speeches were being belivered a lacrosse match was entered between the Sour Spring Indians and the Onondagas. Owing to the close contest the moneys were divided, neither club carrying off the prize. The war dance was one of the attractions of the day.

At 7:30 p. m. about two thousand firemen formed in line for the torchlight procession. After marching through the principal streets they proceeded to the fair ground, where a magnificent display of fireworks was exhibited, thus ending one of the liveliest days ever seen in Brantford.

GEN. GRANT IN ENGLAND.

HIS RECEPTION BY ROYALTY.

NEW YORK, June 2.—General Grant was formally introduced to the Prince of Wales yesterday, and invited by the latter to go to Epsom. At Victoria Station the Prince of Wales and Duke of Cambridge occupied a compartment with Grant. It is expected he will go to Windsor and visit Her Majesty.

NEW YORK, June 3.—The Prince of Wales gave Gen. Grant a private audience at Marlborough House yesterday, introducing him to his household. The Queen has ordered the Lord Chamberlain to extend to the General and Mrs. Grant invitations to all Court entertainments. The General was entertained at a banquet at Apsley House by the Duke of Wellington last night.

THE WAR NEWS.

RUSSIA.

The Russians attacked the Turkish positions at Batoum on the 30th ult., and after an engagement of ten hours were repulsed leaving great numbers of dead and wounded.

A steam tug at Flamanca, British property, and flying the British flag, was sunk by order of the Russian commanding officer. Consul Mansfield has addressed a note to the Roumanian Government requesting an explanation.

A sharp engagement took place outside Kars recently, resulting in a decisive advantage to the Russians. The Turks lost the outlying entrenchments on three sides of Kars, with two guns, and a quantity of ammunition. The Russians lost 36 killed, and the Turks 100.

BUTCHERIES.

A Bucharest despatch says it is understood that a small detached column under selected officers, and having widely outlying objectives, will form part of the Russian scheme of operations after crossing the Danube. The Bash-Bazouks crossed the Danube between Kalarack and Jalomitea, and captured fourteen Roumanian militiamen and out of the calves of their legs.

PEACE PROSPECTS.

The semi-official Provincial Correspondence of Berlin publishes an article which, in the light of recent peace rumors from Bucharest, is significant. The article concludes as follows:—"The efforts of German policy which after the last war found expression and a firm basis in the alliance of the three Emperors, have proved also the present grave crisis to be a guarantee for specific mediation reaching far beyond that narrower alliance. If, notwithstanding the outbreak of the Russo-Turkish war, the prospects of the preservation of peace in Europe have within the last few weeks rather increased than diminished, German policy has an honorable share in this."

Bismarck hopes to bring about an understanding between England and Russia. This is rendered desirable by the strong undercurrent of active animosity in France against Germany. Germany proposes to form an alliance with Italy against Ultramontane dictation, and Bismarck is working to prevent an alliance between France, Austria, and England against the secret but well-known understanding existing between Germany and Russia.

ENGLAND.

Mr. Gladstone at Birmingham received a great ovation. Business was suspended. At the meeting in the evening 30,000 persons were present. Mr. Gladstone made a speech which consisted of an attack on the Turkish Government, but contained the same accusations as on former occasions. A resolution was unanimously passed, amid great enthusiasm, declaring that the wise and honorable policy would be for England to use her influence in conjunction with the united authority of the Great Powers to exact from Turkey effectual guarantees against the mal-treatment and oppression Christians.

In the House of Commons to-day Lord Elcho urged the Government to prepare for the eventualities of the present war. The Secretary of State for War said that although the Government maintains its forces on a peace footing it had not overlooked any possible contingency.

The departure of the Channel Squadron is indefinitely postponed. The cruise will be confined to the English coast.

TURKEY.

though it is old it is new, for history is in this respect constantly repeating itself. Mr. Hanson the Agent of the Hartford Travelers Life and Accident Company, can tell any one who will take the trouble to call upon him, many a harrowing tale illustrative of what we have written above. And as Mr. Hanson's name has been mentioned, we take the liberty to recommend him to any of our readers who are done halting between two opinions and have determined to insure their lives. Call and see him, remember his office over Coxall & Paisley's old stand, Dundas St. Napanee.

"THE AGE OF REASON."

The boy that went to the mill on horse-back, carrying the grist in one end of the bag and stone in the other, when reproved by the miller, and told to divide the grist, replied that his father and grandfather had carried it that way, and he, being no better than they, should continue to do as they did. Similar, or equally as absurd, reasons are accounted as sufficient by some to warrant them in indiscriminately condemning Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines, even though there is overwhelming proof that they possess the merit claimed for them. For many years the Golden Medical Discovery has been recognized as the leading liver and blood medicine in the market. Each year has brought an increase in its sale, and it is now used throughout the civilized world. Thousand of unsolicited testimonials are on file in the Doctor's office, attesting its efficacy in overcoming aggravated coughs, colic, throat and lung affections, also scrofula, tumors, ulcers, and skin diseases. Are you suffering with some chronic malady? If so, and you wish to employ medicines that are scientifically prepared; that are refined and purified by the chemical process employed in their manufacture; that are positive in their action, and specific to the various forms of disease for the cure of which they are recommended, use Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines. Full particulars in Pierce's Memorandum Book, kept for free distribution by all druggists.

The Queen has ordered the Lord Chamberlin to extend to the General and Mrs. Grant invitations to all Court entertainments. The General was entertained at a banquet at Apsley House by the Duke of Wellington last night.

LONDON, June 4.—Gen. Grant attended services at Westminster Abbey yesterday, and listened to a sermon by Dean Stanley. After alluding to the great and irreparable loss two kindred nations had sustained in the decease of Mr. Motley, the reverend gentleman, in the course of his sermon, said General Grant has just laid down the sceptre of the American commonwealth after having by military powers, and still more by the generous treatment of his comrades in victory and his enemies in defeat, restored unity to a great and divided people. England welcomes him as a sign and pledge that the two nations of Anglo-Saxon race are still one in heart and spirit.

SUICIDE OF A CLERGYMAN

The Rev. W. R. Morden, a Baptist Church Minister, suicided with a revolver in the street in London Ont. at noon on the 1st inst. On the person of the deceased were found certain writings, among which were the following sentences:—"Almighty and everlasting God, my Heavenly Father, accept the sacrifice unto The I bring, and let Thy wrathful indignation pass away from an entire world, and especially from Thine ancient spouse, the Catholic Church, and give all repentance unto life; a sacrifice not only for mine own sins but for the errors of all of the people." "And unto him he said, behold I have caused thine iniquity to pass from thee. Zach. iii. 4. "Because I lay down my life that I might take it again no man taketh it from me, but I lay it down, and I have power to take it again." This commandment have I received from my Father. John x., 17-18." Another sentence was to the effect that his body should not be buried: And that a certain ring should not be removed from his finger. An inquest was held when a verdict was rendered of suicide while in a fit of temporary insanity. Morden had a sunstroke ten years ago from which he never entirely recovered.

How Long Halt Ye Between two Opinions.

Indecision is not always a fault; it is often simply a misfortune. There are ever and anon, problems presented to the understanding which are too much for its feeble powers: and in such cases the more judiciously-minded a man, the more conscientiously intent he is upon being right in his conclusion, the more likely is he to be kept in a state of suspense. But whether suspense comes from fault or from misfortune, whether it is the result of unwillingness, or inability to see the truth, it is full of misery and peril. Even in matter of speculation it is not pleasant to be undecided; but it is in regard to practical questions that the greater danger attaches to this state of mind. It is when a man ought to act when there is barely sufficient time for him to do what is imperatively required to be done and he either cannot or will not see precisely what is required of him that the greatest misery and the greatest danger lies.

Upon the higher possible illustration of this truth we cannot here enter. We dare not invade the province of the preacher. There are other matters than matters of religion upon which it is possible for us to be painfully and dangerously undecided, and there are other interests than the highest interests of the soul which may be imperilled by the unhappy state of mind. An undecided man is seldom a successful man in anything. The men who see their way, at a glance and maket up their minds with the least possible delay, and are therefore prepared to act, while others are only thinking about it have a great advantage in the battle of life. They act with a promptness, and usually with an energy, which seldom fail of success, while the undecided man allows the opportunity to pass by unimproved.

Illustrations of this are of daily occurrence and are to be found all around us. But there is just one to which the space at our disposal will allow us to refer at present. It is one to which we have

And unto him he said, behold I have caused thine iniquity to pass from thee. Zech. iii. 4. "Because I lay down my life that I might take it again no man can take it from me, but I lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received from my Father, John x., 17-18." Another sentence was to the effect that his body should not be buried: And that a certain ring should not be removed from his finger. An inquest was held when a verdict was rendered of suicide while in a fit of temporary insanity. Morden had a sunstroke ten years ago from which he never entirely recovered.

The Prince of Wales and the Licensed Victuallers.

At the annual dinner of the Licensed Victuallers held in London (Eng.) a few days since the Prince of Wales was in the chair, and in the course of the few remarks in which he acknowledged the eus- tatory loyal toasts, he said:—"I may state that during the last two or three days I have received some two hundred petitions from various parts of the United Kingdom relative to my attendance here this evening. Of course I don't wish to say a word to disparage these societies, which no doubt have excellent objects in view, but I think in this instance they have overshot the mark. The object of our meeting here to night is not to encourage the love of drink, but rather to support a good and excellent charity. I can only say I am sure that all here will agree with me that no one had more at heart the interests of his adopted country than my lamented father, and I feel perfectly convinced that he would never have been the patron of this society unless he was sure that it was one likely to do good and was deserving of his support."

In a similar spirit of good natured reproof, Lord Granville remarked that he had been solemnly warned not to risk his popularity by publicly associating himself with those monsters of iniquity the Licensed Victuallers, and had replied that, in any case, he should attend the dinner, if it were only to see three hundred monsters of iniquity pleasantly assembled together to promote a work of genuine charity and benevolence.

How Long Halt Ye Between two Opinions.

Indecision is not always a fault; it is often simply a misfortune. There are ever and anon, problems presented to the understanding which are too much for its feeble powers: and in such cases the more judiciously-minded a man, the more conscientiously intent he is upon being right in his conclusion, the more likely is he to be kept in a state of suspense. But whether suspense comes from fault or from misfortune, whether it is the result of unwillingness, or inability to see the truth, it is full of misery and peril. Even in matter of speculation it is not pleasant to be undecided; but it is in regard to practical questions that the greater danger attaches to this state of mind. It is when a man ought to act when there is barely sufficient time for him to do what is imperatively required to be done and he either cannot or will not see precisely what is required of him that the greatest misery and the greatest danger lies.

Upon the higher possible illustration of this truth we cannot here enter. We dare not invade the province of the preacher. There are other matters than matters of religion upon which it is possible for us to be painfully and dangerously undecided, and there are other interests than the highest interests of the soul which may be imperilled by the unhappy state of mind. An undecided man is seldom a successful man in anything. The men who see their way, at a glance and make up their minds with the least possible delay, and are therefore prepared to act, while others are only thinking about it have a great advantage in the battle of life. They act with a promptness, and usually with an energy, which seldom fail of success, while the undecided man allows the opportunity to pass by unimproved.

Illustrations of this are of daily occurrence and are to be found all around us. But there is just one to which the space at our disposal will allow us to refer at present. It is one to which we have frequently had occasion to refer before and to which we may have occasion to invest again. There are hundreds of persons who have had the matter of life and accident insurance before their minds for years, they have turned the subject over and over, again and again, but they have not done anything, because, they say, they have not made up their minds. They have not decided the question, and in the absence of decision there has been no action.

Now what has been the result? In scores of instances in our neighborhood men have been prostrated by painful and disabling accidents for weeks, in some instances for months, during which they have spent the savings of years, when they might just as well had full indemnity for every hour of time they lost, at a very trifling expense. And what is still worse than this, scores and hundreds have died and left their families unprovided for, from the same cause, and perhaps the most painful cases of all are those who find themselves fatally diseased, unmistakable marked as the victims of death, and while they are wasting away under the power of disease, they have their suffering augmented by the better reflection that this weakness and indecision have provided them from making the only provision for themselves and those dependent upon them which was in their power, by availing themselves of the advantages of life insurance. We are well aware that this is an old story; but

THE WAR NEWS.

RUSSIA.
Russians attacked the Turkish ships at Batoum on the 30th ult., after an engagement of ten were repulsed leaving great number dead and wounded.

Sam tug at Flamanca, British pro and flying the British flag, was in order of the Russian commander. Consul Mansfield has addressed a note to the Roumanian Govt. requesting an explanation.

an engagement took place outside recently, resulting in a decisive advantage to the Russians. The Turks lost flying entrenchments on three Kara, with two guns, and a quantity of ammunition. The Russians killed, and the Turks 100.

BUTCHERIES.
The latest despatch says it is understood that a small detached column under officers, and having widely outposts, will form part of the scheme of operations after crossing the Danube. The Bash-Bazouks the Danube between Kalarack and Iomitea and captured fourteen Russian militiamen and out of the hands of their legs.

PEACE PROSPECTS.
The official Provincial Correspondent Berlin publishes an article which, in light of recent peace rumors from the East, is significant. The article is as follows:—"The efforts of a policy which after the last war expression and a firm basis in the of the three Emperors, have also the present grave crisis to be met for pacific mediation reach beyond that narrower alliance. Withstanding the outbreak of the Turkish war, the prospects of the of peace in Europe have the last few weeks rather increased. German policy has a share in this."

Rock hopes to bring about an understanding between England and Russia is rendered desirable by the undercurrent of active animosity against Germany. Germany to form an alliance with Italy Ultramontane dictation, and Bismarck working to prevent an alliance France, Austria, and England he secret but well-known understanding existing between Germany and

ENGLAND.
Lordstone at Birmingham received invitation. Business was suspended the meeting in the evening 30,000 were present. Mr. Gladstone a speech which consisted of attack on the Turkish Government, aimed the same accusations as on previous occasions. A resolution was easily passed, amid great enthusiasm, declaring that the wise and honorable policy would be for England to influence in conjunction with the authority of the Great Powers to maintain Turkey effectual guarantees in mal-treatment and oppression.

House of Commons to-day Lord Ged the Government to prepare ventilities of the present war. Secretary of State for War said that the Government maintains its peace footing it had not over any possible contingency. The departure of the Channel Squadron definitely postponed. The cruise confined to the English coast.

TURKEY.

though it is old it is new, for history is in this respect constantly repeating itself. Mr. Hanson the Agent of the Hartford Travelers Life and Accident Company, can tell any one who will take the trouble to call upon him, many a harrowing tale illustrative of what we have written above. And as Mr. Hanson's name has been mentioned, we take the liberty to recommend him to any of our readers who are done halting between two opinions and have determined to insure their lives. Call and see him, remember his office over Coxall & Paisley's old stand, Dundas St. Napanee.

"THE AGE OF REASON."
The boy that went to the mill on horse-back, carrying the grist in one end of the bag and a stone in the other, when reproved by the miller, and told to divide the grist, replied that his father and grandfather had carried it that way, and he, being no better than they, should continue to do as they did. Similar, or equally as absurd, reasons are accounted as sufficient by some to warrant them in indiscriminately condemning Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines, even though there is overwhelming proof that they possess the merit claimed for them. For many years the Golden Medical Discovery has been recognized as the leading liver and blood medicine in the market. Each year has brought an increase in its sale, and it is now used throughout the civilized world. Thousand of unsolicited testimonials are on file in the Doctor's office, attesting its efficacy in overcoming aggravated coughs, catarrhs, throat and lung affections, also scrofula, tumors, ulcers, and skin diseases. Are you suffering with some chronic malady? If so, and you wish to employ medicines that are scientifically prepared; that are refined and purified by the chemical process employed in their manufacture; that are positive in their action, and specific to the various forms of disease for the cure of which they are recommended, use Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines. Full particulars in Pierce's Memorandum Book, kept for free distribution by all druggists.

NO RISK.
Thomas' Electric Oil! Worth Ten Times its Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

Pain cannot stay where it is used. It is the cheapest Medicine ever made. One dose cures common Sore Throat. One bottle has cured BRONCHITIS. Fifty cents' worth has cured an OLD STANDING COUGH. One or two bottles cures bad cases of PILES and KIDNEY TROUBLES. Six to eight applications cure ANY CASE OF EXCORIATED NIPPLES OR INFLAMED BREAST. One bottle has cured LAME BACK of years' standing. Daniel Plank, of Brookfield, Tioga County, Pa., says: "I went thirty miles for a bottle of your Oil, which effected a WONDERFUL CURE of a CROOKED LIMB, by six applications." Another who has had ASTHMA for years, says: "I have half of a 50 cent bottle left, and $100 would not buy it if I could get no more."

Rufus Robinson, of Nunda, N. Y., writes: "One small bottle of your ELECTRIC OIL restored the voice where the persons had not spoken above a whisper in FIVE YEARS." Rev. J. Mallory, of Wyoming, N. Y., writes: "Your ELECTRIC OIL cured me of Bronchitis in one week."

It is composed of SIX of the BEST OILS THAT ARE KNOWN. Is as good for internal as for external use, and is believed to be immeasurably superior to anything ever made. Will save you much suffering and many dollars of expense.

Beware of Imitations. Ask for Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. See that the signature of S. N. T. JONES is on the wrapper, and the name of Northrop and Lyman are blown in the bottle, and "Take no other." Sold by all medicine dealers. Price, 25 cts. NORTHROP & LYMAN, Toronto, Ont., Proprietors for the Dominion.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC

A VIEW OF KANSAS, BY A SETTLER.

(To the Editor of The Globe.)

SIR.—If the result of my ten years' experience here could possibly be placed before your readers, I am satisfied it would be far more profitable to many of them than it has been to me. Let any one visit Kansas in June, and he might justly call it "the prettiest country under the sun." Yet Kansas in summer is but a flirting gay coquette, suffused with flowers, and smiles, and sweetest promises that captivate men's hearts, and rob them of their better judgement—till when they go to gather autumn fruits, and then they only find the sere and yellow leaves of bitter disappointment. Kansas to-day has much spare corn, but it is a feast or famine all the time. I have sold it for ten cents a bushel one year and bought it another year for $2.50. Perhaps some of your readers will will say, why did you not keep your corn? But let them live here awhile, and they will find an answer for themselves. Lots of money has been made in Kansas, but I never knew a farmer make it except by trading; honest farming does not pay. Kansas is valuable chiefly as a grazing country, and in this respect it loses value year by year. A few years ago people came here with a rush, thinking that all they needed to make them rich was merely to invert prairie sod. But they made a big mistake, and now I see abandoned farms all around me, and the evils of prairie breaking more apparent everywhere. Some time ago I had a talk with one of my most intelligent and thrifty neighbours, who has been here since '57 and who, by the way, has been paying interest at 15 per cent. for the last four years; and he told me he would willingly give $5 an acre to have his farm back to prairie-grass again, and that he had paid hundreds of dollars to seed it down, and always failed.

In wet seasons like last year and this, tame grass does well enough; but the very first drouth or grasshopper raid makes all black ground again.

Since I came here in 1867 I have seen four crops of wheat winter-killed, and this is the fifth season we have "hoppers." The same gentleman and I concluded that the average of all our crops for the last ten years—counting all the failures—would run about as follows:—Fall wheat, per acre, about 4 bushels; spring, 5 or 6; rye, 16; oats, 20; flax, 6; barley, 15; corn, 25; potatoes, 35; garden stuffs, about once in three years; peaches about the same; and apples something oftener, but few in number.

It is rare to find a farm here that is not mortgaged, and capitalists have things all their own way. They first get our money and now they have got our land, and the probabilities are they will find their hands full yet. Grasshoppers get blamed for more than they deserve, while other things are seldom mentioned. The fact is this is a perfect nest of insects. But by far the greatest enemy we have to fear is the hot south wind that commences to blow generally in June, and sometimes continues like a monsoon for many weeks, killing vegetation, parching the ground, bringing malaria and hosts of bugs, and grubs, and many other evils in its train. And then, apart from all these drawbacks, there are other things that some of your readers who are grown weary of the axe and handspike would not like. But I shall only name a few. They would not like our Sabbath, and they would not like our churches; they would not like our day school, and they would not like our law courts, and they would not like our judges, they would not like our sleepy disregard of law, and they would not like our vigilances; they might not like our marriages, and certainly

"BEST PIANOS, LOWEST PRICE"

CHARLES D. BLAKE & Co's..

Grand Square and Upright Piano-Forte

JOHN N. LAZIER,
BELLEVILLE,

General Agent for the Dominion of Georgia

ed. In wet seasons like last year and this, tame grass does well enough; but the very first drouth or grasshopper raid makes all black ground again.

Since I came here in 1867 I have seen four crops of wheat winter-killed, and this is the fifth season we have 'hoppers'. The same gentleman and I concluded that the average of all our crops for the last ten years—counting all the failures—would run about as follows:—Fall wheat, per acre, about 4 bushels; spring, 5 or 6; rye, 16; oats, 20; flax, 6; barley, 15; corn, 25; potatoes, 35; garden stuffs, about once in three years; peaches about the same; and apples something oftener, but few in number.

It is rare to find a farm her that is not mortgaged, and capitalists have things all their own way. They first get our money and now they have got our land, and the probabilities are they will find the r hands full yet. Grasshoppers get blamed for more than they deserve, while other things are seldom mentioned. The fact is this is a perfect nest of insects. But by far the greatest enemy we have to fear is the hot south wind that commences to blow generally in June, and sometimes continues like a monsoon for many weeks, killing vegetation, parching the ground, bringing malaria and hosts of bugs, and grubs, and many other evils in its train. And then, apart from all these drawbacks, there are other things that some of your readers who are grown weary of the axe and handspike would not like. But I shall only name a few. They would not like our Sabbath, and they would not like our churches; they would not like our day school, and they would not like our teachers; they would not like our law courts, and they would not like our judges, they would not like our sleepy disregard of law, and they would not like our vigilances; they might not like our marriages, and certainly would not like our divorces; they would not like to see the poor industrious, honest man debased, nor would they like to see the scoundrel, though rich, exalted; they would not like our outward gaudy brag, nor would they like our hollow inward emptiness; they would not like our shabby straw-roofed farm buildings, and they would not like our fences; they would not like our horses, and they would not like our sheep; nor would they think that the busy hum of the good old spinning wheel was fully compensated by the crawling tones of a mortgaged organ; they would not like our war debts, and they would not like our taxes; they would not be satisfied unless they knew how things went on at Washington, and still less so when they had found out; they would very naturally expect to know all about our politics by living among our people, and would be quite surprised when they found they had to send for the Toronto Globe to teach them what was going on around them; and if they lived far out on the distant treeless prairie in a damp and miserable "dug out," with nothing to make a fire, and saw themselves and all their families down sick, and so helpless, that perhaps not one could go for a draught of water, if such be worthy of the name, at such a time, I apprehend, they might well wish themselves safe back again to the woods of Canada, or back again to their dear old homes in Merry England, or back again to "Scotia's strand." The.

"Land of brown heath and shaggy wood, Land of the mountain and the flood."

Nor at such a time would they be likely to receive much comfort from a visit from some of the sons of Uncle Sam who generally considers it a virtue as well as a duty to curse "Old Johnnie Bull." But there is yet another reason which I must not omit. Old Country folks in general never becomes fully Americanized, they are too slow. The Americans say they are too stupid, but this is not where the matter lies, either, and if I may be allowed to give my opinion on this I would say, it is because they are too honest.

Americanizing means sharpening up, and it means whittling one down to the very honest point of which I have an average of $1.40 each.

A careful estimate leads to the belief that at least sixteen millions of the twenty one and half millions of fractional U. S. currency outstanding will never be presented for redemption.

The New England Free Lover's disgraceful convention in Boston, was almost broken up by a party of Harvard students last night. The police would not interfere.

Americanizing means sharpening up, and it means whittling one down to the very keenest point of polished, brazen impudence, if not rascality itself. And naturally they are not shrewd enough for this, they have not got it in them, and it would never pay to learn it. And if I have any advice worth given them, I would say stay where you are, and where you always feel at home, and go on with the work of building up your great Dominion, and consider if the highest honor and privilege to live and die beneath that flag on which I hope the sun may never set; never forgetting that it is righteousness alone that exalteth a nation; and wherever you find God most highly honored, there you will find that men are most respected, and by far the happiest, and therefore richest.

OLD BACKWOODSMAN
Atchison, Kansas, May 20, 1877.

HOW TO AVOID DRUNKENNESS.

If you would keep from drinking so great a quantity of ardent spirits, eat. Eat more. Eat nutritious food. Eat some thing whenever you take a drink. The drunk in all cases comes from the stomach full of whiskey and not food. There is a simple lesson yet to be learned by many, and that is they do not eat enough of real blood, bone nerve and tissue-making food. You may half starve to death on salt fish, potatoes, cabbage, turnips, fried liver, stewed kidney, and a score of other dishes which please the taste, but add little or nothing to the body force. Eggs, the best of steak, mutton and bread are what one requires for strength. It is this unconscious, half-starved condition which causes so much of the craving for a temporary increase of strength, and that is quickest gained whiskey through a glass of whiskey. That gives for a few moments a spasmodic impulse to the wheels of life, sending them whizzing and spinning around for a few moments; then comes the reaction, and they turn more sluggishly than ever. The best spirits in the world reside in good blood, the worst in bad. It is that which sends false imaginations, suspicious and despondencies to the drain.—Graphic.

The Graphic's Paris special says France is trembling on the verge of revolution. It may take the form of a coup d'etat by MacMahon, or the seizure of the President by the Republicans, and his trial as a traitor to the Constitution. The Journal des Debats says France has made a retrograde movement, in which the efforts of four years for the advancement of the Republic have been lost.

The Kingston British Whig says:— "The elevators were busily employed on Saturday until midnight by the M. T. Company, in consequence of the rush of grain vessels awaiting discharge. Garden Island presents a busy scene, too, a very large fleet of timber vessels having passed through the canal consigned to Messrs. Calvin & Breck. Whatever may be the prospects of the grain trade we cannot say; but we are satisfied that the timber trade will be attended with unusual results."

The coroner's jury on the Rockford, Ill., Court House disaster found Architect Gay, through neglect to provide for the great amount of weight called for to complete the building according to his plans, guilty of the deaths of the deceased; that the Board of Supervisors failed to use the necessary caution in examining the plans and specifications, and acted unwisely in not employing a competent architect to superintend its construction.

Cobourg, May 25. Father Timlin, Roman Catholic parish priest of Cobourg, was buried here this morning. His funeral was attended by a large concourse of people of all denominations, amongst whom were several Protestant ministers of the town. The funeral services were conducted by Bishop O'Brien, of Kingston assisted by nineteen parish priests belonging to the diocese. Father Timlin has been for thirty-three years parish priest of Cobourg. He was universally respected by all denominations for his consistent Christian deportment and his genial and kindly disposition towards all.

A LECTURE TO YOUNG MEN.

We have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, of this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequence may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

For the information of Christian generally it may be briefly stated that this Institution now in full operation, owes its origin to the liberality of a Christian gentleman, a resident of Toronto, who has invested a portion of his means in the enterprise, as a free will offering to the Lord, with the view of scattering broadcast over our land, TRACTS, BOOKS, &c., &c., which unfold the exalted privileges of the believers, and treat of the "Life of Faith" or Trust, and of the power and peace of HOLINESS, and Gospel and Evangelical Literature.

Special notice is called to the fact that this

No Denominational Institution.

It is neither connected with, nor under the patronage of any particular church. All the Publications it issues will be strictly evangelical and will meet the wants of all Christians. Largely the Books, &c., &c., will be those published by the Willard Tract Repository of Boston, under the care of the well known Dr. CULLIS.

ALL PROFITS that may be made will be devoted to the establishment of a fund for gratuitous distribution of the Tracts and Books at persons and places where they are needed. A may be directed by the Committee. We beg also to say that this Fund for free distribution is open for donations to all who may desire to help in this work of God.

We ask all who may desire to promote the higher spiritual life of the churches and to help in winning souls for Christ, to co-operate with us by circulating sound religious literature throughout the land.

References for further information may be made to the following brethren (and others who may be added), who will act as a Committee for selection and distribution.

A LECTURE TO YOUNG MEN.

WE have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (a full medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only a cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, of this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequence may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

For the information of Christian generally, it may be briefly stated that this Institution, now in full operation, owes its origin to the liberality of a Christian gentleman, a resident of Toronto, who has invested a portion of his means in the enterprise, as a free will offering to the Lord, with the view of scattering broadcast over our land, TRACTS, BOOKS, &c., which unfold the exalted privileges of the believers, and treat of the "LIFE OF FAITH" or Trust, and of the power and peace of HOLINESS, and Gospel and Evangelical Literature.

Special notice is called to the fact that this is

No Denominational Institution.

It is neither connected with, nor under the patronage of any particular church. All the Publications it issues will be strictly evangelical, and will meet the wants of all Christians. Largely the Books, &c., &c., will be those published by the Willard Tract Repository of Boston, under the care of the well known Dr. CUTLER.

ALL PROFITS that may be made will be devoted to the establishment of a fund for gratuitous distribution of the Tracts and Books to persons and places where they are needed as may be directed by the Committee. We beg also to say that this Fund for free distribution is open for donations to all who may desire to help in this work of God.

We ask all who may desire to promote the higher spiritual life of the churches and to help in winning souls for Christ, to co-operate with us by circulating sound religious literature throughout the land.

References for further information may be made to the following brethren (and others who may be added), who will act as a Committee for selection and distribution.

CATARRH!

Five Years' Sickness Cured by Four Bottles of Constitutional Catarrh Remedy.

Pain in Shoulders, Back and Lungs, and Droppings in Throat Disappear.

ST. MARY, P. O., Sept. 12, 1870.

MR. T. J. B. HARDING,
DEAR SIR:—Being desirous that others may know something of the merits of your constitutional Catarrh Remedy, I wish to inform you what it has done for me. I am twenty-nine years old; had been out of health for about five years. I had employed three or four different doctors, and tried various medicines, without receiving any permanent benefit, but continued rather to grow worse, until last fall, when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe soreness and pain under the shoulder blades and through the shoulders, with very lame back, and a feeling in my right lung as though there was a weight bearing it down, with continual dropping in the throat and down upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I commenced to take your Catarrh Remedy, one of which eased my pains and gave me an improved appetite, and after taking four bottles I was restored to health so as to be able to endure hard and continued labor, such as chopping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I attribute solely, with God's blessing, to the use of your Catarrh Remedy.

Yours truly HENRY NIDER.

THE MISSING RING
CHAPTER III.

If there was one thing that would the bosom of Will Clayton with indignation it was to hear the name nie Burton spoken in a disrespectful manner. It was only by an effort of that he was able to restrain himself, facing Alf Walton and his com and force the former to retract his Discretion, however, forbade him acting in so rash a manner.

As he reached the gate that led home, he beheld lying on the ground his feet a gold ring. He picked and, as he examined it, noticed had formerly contained a jewel that was missing. Further examination revealed the following inscription, engraved on the inside of the ring: "Annie, from Aunt Jane." So was his attention directed to the fact that he failed to detect the presence of a man who was concealed near soon as Will departed, he emerged his hiding-place and walked away.

Will's first thought, on finding the ring, was how to restore it to its owner. He immediately directed steps to one of the printing offices to advertise it. As he was along, his mind absorbed in the matter, he felt some one jostling against him.

"Deuce (ho) me," he heard say in a drunken manner. He recognized the man as Alf Walton, his disappointment to find his arrival at the printing office, the ring was missing! He had placed his vest pocket previous to leaving. He resolved to immediately retrace steps in hopes that he might find his way back. It never occurred that it had been abstracted from him by Alf Walton when the latter against him.

Every spot that Will Clayton had over, from the time that he found the ring until he arrived at the office was carefully examined, search proved fruitless.

As soon as Walton succeeded in obtaining possession of the ring, he directed way to Will's home.

"It was deuced fortunate that I found it," he soliloquized, as he along. "If I don't make trouble Miss Burton's lover, then my ring will be lost. She will hear soon enough—hear of him as a wonder how she will like it!"

When he arrived near his home he saw a young lady upon the street. It was Ellen, Will's sister. He waited until she was some distance, when he opened the gate and entered the yard. Cast eyes up the street, he beheld Will going slowly toward the house. He quickly concealed himself in an outhouse where he remained until the latter completed his search for the ring and departed from his place of moment, and carefully wended to his home.

Fortunately for Walton's evil intentions it so happened that the door into the house had been left unlocked and accordingly he entered without difficulty. From there he passed into the dining room, and, taking that he had stolen from Will a short time previous, he concealed the bottom of a sofa.

Only a few moments had elapsed after the departure of Alf Walton, his burglarious occupation, when Clayton returned to the house. His keen eye detected, at once, on his entering the dining room, that something was amiss. He noticed that his sister had been there during his absence. By the side of the sofa traces of mud, as if some one had been near it; but, in spite of his examination of the different rooms, he could come to no definite conclusion regard to the motive of any one's being in the house during his absence. There had been nothing stolen from any apartments, as far as he was able to perceive. As he was in the act of re-entring the sofa, he heard something drop

Edith is fair, the painter said,
Her cheek so richly glows.
My palette ne'er could match the red
Of that pure damask rose.

Perchance the evening rain drops light,
Soft sprinkling from above,
Have caught the sunset's color bright
And borne it to my love.

In distant regions I must seek
For tints before unknown,
Ere I can paint the brilliant cheek
That blooms for me alone.

All this his sister heard,
Who looked by his side;
To check such theories absurd,
That gay young sprite replied:

Oh, I can tell you where to get
That pretty crimson bloom,
For well I know where it is set In Cousin Edith's room.

I'm sure that I could find the place,
If you want some to keep;
I watched her put it on her face,
She didn't see me peep.

So nicely she laid on the pink,
As well as you could do:
And really I almost think
She is an artist too.

The maddened painter tore his hair,
And vowed he ne'er would wed:
And never since to maiden fair
A tender word has said.

Bright rosy cheeks and skin of pearl
He knows a shower may spoil;
And when he wants a blooming girl,
Paints one himself in oil.

THE MISSING RING.

CHAPTER III.

If there was one thing that would fill the bosom of Will Clayton with deep indignation it was to hear the name of Annie Burton spoken in a disrespectful manner. It was only by an effort of his will that he was able to restrain himself from facing Alf Walton and his companion, and force the former to retract his threat. Discretion, however, forbade him from acting in so rash a manner.

As he reached the gate that led to his home, he beheld lying on the ground at his feet a gold ring. He picked it up, and, as he examined it, noticed that it had formerly contained a jewel that was now missing. Further examination revealed the following inscription, delicately engraved on the inside of the ring: "To Annie, from Aunt Jane." So intently was his attention directed to the trinket, that he failed to detect the presence of a man who was concealed near by. As soon as Will departed, he emerged from his hiding-place and walked away.

Will's first thought, on finding the ring, was how to restore it to its rightful owner. He immediately directed his steps to one of the printing offices, in order to advertise it. As he was walking along, his mind absorbed in meditation, he felt some one jostling against him.

"Deuce (hic) me," he heard some one say in a drunken manner.

He recognized the man as Alf Walton. What was his disappointment to find on his arrival at the printing office, that the ring was missing! He had placed it in his vest pocket previous to leaving home.

Alf Walton was here last evening, and he asked me if I would use my influence in persuading you to be his wife. At first I refused, but afterward, when he threatened to expose a secret which I have kept for years, I reluctantly complied. It rests with you, Annie, to bring happiness or misery into the family. If you refuse to marry Alf Walton, the latter fate is ours.

"Father, for your sake I promise, but my heart belongs to Will. The love that a wife should bear a husband can never bind Alf Walton's heart to mine. I detest him. Yet I will sacrifice all, trusting in Him who doeth all things well." Overcome by her emotions, she burst into tears. In the midst of her weeping the door bell rang.

"Remain here, Annie, until I return," said Mr. Burton, rising and going to the door.

In a few minutes he returned, holding in his hand a letter.

"Annie, do you recognize that handwriting?" he asked, showing her the envelope.

"It looks like Will's," she replied. "Is the letter from him?"

"I will read it to you."

So saying, Mr. Burton took the note from the envelope, and read as follows:—

"FRIEND JIM:—I got the ring the other day. The girl was away at the time. Miss Burton thinks that I love her, but she's mistaken. I sold the diamond to Bill Cuisick, but I still have the ring."

Your friend,

WILL CLAYTON."

"What is your opinion, Annie, in regard to this?" asked Mr. Burton, refolding the letter and placing it in the envelope.

"I think that it is a shallow forgery," she replied. "Mr. Clayton would not write such a letter; he is too much of a gentleman to express himself in such language. I no more believe that he wrote it than that you, father, have committed murder!"

Mr. Burton's heart throbbed violently, and his face changed color as Annie uttered these words.

"I will admit, Annie, that it looks contrary to reason that Mr. Clayton should have written this. But what in regard to the ring?"

"You remember, father, the ring that Aunt Jane presented to me just before she died? It is lost, and I have been unable to find it. It is my impression that it was stolen."

Shortly afterward, Mr. Burton arose and left the house, first promising Annie that he would endeavor to regain possession of the ring that she had lost.

In spite of Annie's promise to her father to marry Alf Walton, she did not for a moment eradicate from her heart the love she bore Will Clayton. The dreaded time to approach in which he would learn of her marriage. She was a woman of much courage, yet it seemed to her that she could never face that ordeal.

periment of living upon four ounces of rice a day for a week. Exciting stories are told of the privateers that ran in, amidst terrible dangers, with provisions, and of the storms which threw welcome wood and cork within reach of the besieged. The Rock at one time would surely have been taken had it not been for Admiral Rodney, who, sailing off the Strait captured a small fleet of Spanish war ships and merchantmen, and clearing the Strait of besiegers, brought his prize into port. But all danger was not yet averted; Gibraltar was again blockaded; survey broke out in the garrison and Morocco refused her harbors to English ships. The enemy crept closer and closer to the fortresses, but relief coming every now and then enabled the English still to hold out. The bombardments were fearful to endure "The city was almost destroyed; scarcely a house habitable, and those left standing pierced by shot and shell." At one time the desperate garrison fell to plundering the town; Elliott shot the leaders in this outrage. The long agony, full of terrific combats and frightful privations, ended by the final abandonment of the siege early in 1783. If in that year the English had to make up their minds that they must let go their American colonies, they had at least the consolation that Gibraltar was still theirs.—Harper's for June.

Always Marry Poor to get Rich

The public is advised from the pulpit to marry young, and even marry poor. Marry, young man and woman, and struggle up together. Hard times, poverty, want, anxiety, worry, are good. Teach you how to live properly. Teach you how to enjoy yourself. It is good to get up in the morning and find nothing for breakfast. No anything to buy for breakfast with. Good thing for a plant, you know, to be constantly stunted of air, water, sunshine, soil. Make vigorous, healthy fruit. All the smart men commenced low down. Were poor. Opened clams, &c., and oysters. Like the present Astors and Vanderbilts, and Boston Adams, the Lawrences. And lots of others. All young men who commence low down and struggle up, get rich and become great. Like the 150,000 tramps in the Eastern and Middle States. Want, worry, fret, anxiety, two radishes and a peanut for breakfast, make brilliant men and women. Find 'em floating in the bay every day. Suicide from want. Six last Sunday. Nobody gets discouraged. Marry, young men, and struggle up together. Everything to encourage you. Brilliant exceptions of poor young men who get rich always published in books and papers. Biographies of self-made tramps, and suicides in guilt binding not so common. About 10,000 a year. Marry poor, young man. Have five children and earn six dollars a week. Fourth story garret, two rooms, wife doing washing, bones for breakfast, make soup of them for dinner, fry the tin plates for supper. Makes you strong. Teaches you virtue, honor, honesty, self-reliance.

THE MISSING KING.
CHAPTER III.

If there was one thing that would fill the bosom of Will Clayton with deep indignation it was to hear the name of Annie Burton spoken in a disrespectful manner. It was only by an effort of his will that he was able to restrain himself from facing Alf Walton and his companion,
and force the former to retract his threat.
Discretion, however, forbade him from acting in so rash a manner.

As he reached the gate that led to his home, he beheld lying on the ground at his feet a gold ring. He picked it up, and, as he examined it, noticed that it had formerly contained a jewel that it now missing. Further examination revealed the following inscription, delicately engraved on the inside of the ring: "To Annie, from Aunt Jane." So intently was his attention directed to the trinket, that he failed to detect the presence of a man who was concealed near by. As soon as Will departed, he emerged from his hiding-place and walked away.

Will's first thought, on finding the ring, was how to restore it to its rightful owner. He immediately directed his steps to one of the printing offices, in order to advertise it. As he was walking along, his mind absorbed in meditation,
he felt some one jostling against him.

"Deuce (hic) me," he heard some one say in a drunken manner.

He recognized the man as Alf Walton.
What was his disappointment to find on his arrival at the printing office, that the ring was missing! He had placed it in his vest pocket previous to leaving home.
He resolved to immediately retrace his steps in hopes that he might find it on his way back. It never occurred to him that it had been abstracted from his pocket
by Alf Walton when the latter jostled against him.

Every spot that Will Clayton had been over, from the time that he found the ring until he arrived at the printing office was carefully examined, but his search proved fruitless.

As soon as Walton succeeded in obtaining possession of the ring, he directed his way to Will's home.

"It was deuced fortunate that I was in time," he soliloquized, as he walked along. "If I don't make trouble for Miss Burton's lover, then my name is not Alf Walton. She will hear of him soon enough—hear of him as a thief. I wonder how she will like it?"

When he arrived near our hero's house,
he saw a young lady open the gate and enter the street. It was Ellen Clayton, Will's sister. He waited until she had gone some distance, when he opened the gate and entered the yard. Casting his eyes up the street, he beheld Will walking slowly toward the house. Walton quickly concealed himself in an arbor, where he remained until the latter had completed his search for the ring, and again departed from his place of concealment, and carefully wended his way the house.

Fortunately for Walton's evil purpose,
it so happened that the door in the rear of the house had been left unfastened,
and accordingly he entered the kitchen without difficulty. From there he stepped into the dining room, and, taking the ring that he had stolen from Will Clayton a short time previous, he concealed it in the bottom of a sofa.

Only a few moments had rolled away,
after the departure of Alf Walton from his burglarious occupation, when Will Clayton returned to the house. His keen eye detected, at once, on his entering the dining room, that some one besides his sister had been there during his absence. By the side of the sofa he saw traces of mud, as if some one had recently been near it; but, in spite of his close examination of the different rooms, he could come to no definite conclusion in regard to the motive of any one's entering the house during his absence. There had been nothing stolen from any of the apartments, as far as he was able to perceive. As he was in the act of removing the sofa, he heard something drop on the carpet. What was his surprise and delight to behold the ring that he had remond to Bill Cuisick, but I still have the nig.

Your friend,
WILL CLAYTON."

"What is your opinion, Annie, in regard to this?" asked Mr. Burton, refold-ing the letter and placing it in the envelope.

"I think that it is a shallow forgery," she replied. "Mr. Clayton would not write such a letter; he is too much of a gentleman to express himself in such language. I no more believe that he wrote it than that you, father, have committed murder!"

Mr. Burton's heart throbbed violently, and his face changed color as Annie uttered these words.

"I will admit, Annie, that it looks contrary to reason that Mr. Clayton should have written this. But what in regard to the ring?"

"You remember, father, the ring that Aunt Jane presented to me just before she died? It is lost, and I have been unable to find it. It is my impression that it was stolen."

Shortly afterward, Mr. Burton arose and left the house, first promising Annie that he would endeavor to regain possession of the ring that she had lost.

In spite of Annie's promise to her father to marry Alf Walton, she did not for a moment eridicate from her heart the love she bore Will Clayton. The dreaded time to approach in which he would learn of her marriage. She was a woman of much courage, yet it seemed to her that she could never face that ordeal.

On the following day, Alf Walton called at Mr. Burton's residence. He was met at the door by the banker, and invited within. The meeting between the two men was not marked by any warmth of feeling. Walton was informed that Annie Burton had promised to become his wife at which information he appeared highly pleased.

Annie received him even more coldly than her father done. He endeavored to enter into conversation with her, but with little success. He remained but a short time. During his visit he attempted to ingratiate himself into the good will of his future bride, but his efforts proved unavailing.

The day on which the marriage between Annie Burton and Alf Walton was to take place finally arrived. It was a lovely morning; the winds were soft, and in the heavens the sun shone brightly, shedding
his smiles on hill and dale.

At ten o'clock, Walton arrived at the house, and shortly afterward the clergyman entered the parlor where the entire family were assembled. The marriage rites were then commenced. The minister had just opened the bible when the quick ringing of the door bell on the ears of those present.

"Go on!" said Walton, nervously.
Mr. Burton arose and went to the door to answer the summons. In a short time he returned, accompanied by two men,
a detective, and Will Clayton.

"Alfred Walton," said the officer, "you are my prisoner; I arrest you on the charge of burglary—for breaking into Charles Wilson's store on the night of the first of this month."

Walton turned to Mr. Burton, and, in a voice of the bitterest sarcasm, said:
"Never mind, Mr. Burton, your time will shortly come."

"To what do you refer?" asked Clayton.

"I am glad to state that your prepos-sitive father-in-law murdered Charles Howard, some twenty year ago in the city of Cleveland," said Walton.

"Allow me, Mr. Walton to disabuse your mind of such an impression. Mr.
Howard was not killed, as you think,
but is now lying in Boston. Thinking that his opponent was dead, Mr. Burton fled from the country. "This gentleman," referring to the detective, "is well acquainted with Mr. Howard, and is able to corroborate my statement."

"Mr. Clayton is right," said the detective. "Mr. Howard told me of the trouble that took place between him and Mr. Burton some twenty years ago. He

The public is advised from the pulpit to marry young, and even marry poor.
Marry, young man and woman, and struggle up together. Hard times, poverty want, anxiety, worry, are good. Teach you how to live properly. Teach you how to enjoy yourself. It is good to get up in the morning and find nothing for breakfast. Not anything to buy breakfast with. Good thing for a plant, you know, to be constantly stunted of air, water, sunshine, soil. Make vigorous, healthy fruit. All the smart men commenced low down. Were poor. Opened clams, &c., and oysters. Like the present Astors and Vanderbilts, and Boston Adam's, the Lawrences. And lots of others. All young men who commence low down and struggle up, get rich and become great. Like the 150,000 tramps in the Eastern and Middle States. Want, worry, fret, anxiety, two radishes and a peanut for breakfast, make brilliant men and women. Find 'em floating in the bay every day. Suicide from want. Six last Sunday. Nobody gets discouraged.
Marry, young men, and struggle up together. Everything to encourage you.
Brilliant exceptions of poor young men who get rich always published in books and papers. Biographies of self-made tramps, and suicides in guilt binding not so common. About 10,000 a year.
Marry poor, young man. Have five children and earn six dollars a week. Fourth story garret, two rooms, wife doing washing, bones for breakfast, make soup of them for dinner, fry the tin plates for supper. Makes you strong. Teaches you virtue, honor, honesty, self-reliance.
Marry young and struggle down—to the rumshop—to the dock—to the jail—to the grave. Good things, luxuries, fresh air, country in the summer, prime roasts, airy streets, will ruin you, will degenerate you, will make your course, unrefined and unhappy. No. Live for twenty-five cents a day. Buy stale eggs, deseased meat, poor flour, and the poorest of everything, because it is cheap.
These things will make you strong and healthy. Add also to your mental power and clearness. Culture and development come of the poorest circumstances and surroundings. Marry young, then and very poor.—Graphic.

A Clerical Dramatist

The gospel, the whole gospel, and nothing but the gospel; that is what the worthy elders of Ayr will have. The minister of the parish of Riccarton Eng.
is over-lord of Shakespeare, and on April 15th used a quotation from Othello in rounding off his sermon. Four elders resolved to resign their offices and to "worship" somewhere else, where the truths of the gospel required not to be illustrated or enforced by quotations from the obscene conversation of Iago and Othello. It was not that he preached Shakespeare, but that he preached Shakespeare at them. There was the rub. There had been a misunderstanding at a public meeting, and he had stopped the mouths of the elders by closing the exercise abruptly with prayer, and on the following Sunday had preached at them, as if made a cowardly attack upon them by flinging Shakespeare at their heads. The elders have carried the complaint before the Presbytery, the minister has pleaded not guilty, and a committee has been appointed to smooth these unhappy differences. The quotation from Othello was this:

"If thou dost slander her, and torture me,
Never pray more: abandon all remorse.
On horror's head horrors accumulate.
Do deeds that make Heaven weep, all earth amazed!
For nothing canst thou to damnation add Greater than that."

lution possibly imminent in France, and with serious debates constantly occurring in her own Parliament, her Majesty retires into the depths of the Highlands,

Will was one of those men who can readily trace effects to cause. There could be no doubt in his mind that some one had obtained possession of the ring, and concealed it in the sofa for some evil purpose.

CHAPTER IV.

The nearer the time approached for Mr. Burton to inform his daughter that it was his request that she should marry Alf Walton, the more he dreaded it. He would gladly have been spared the painful task, but the remembrance of Walton's threat was still fresh in his mind, and he saw no way then to comply with the latter's demand.

He well knew that Walton held in his hand a secret which if divulged to the public would, in all probability, commit the banker to the State Prison or the gallows. Better that M. Burton should sacrifice his daughter's anticipation of future happiness than to bring lasting disgrace on the family.

On the day following the evening in which the interview between Alf Walton and Burton had taken place, the latter and Burton had spoken to his daughter, requesting her presence in private. She followed him into the parlor, and took a seat by the window.

"Annie," began Mr. Burton, "unforeseen circumstances have compelled me to ask of you a favor which otherwise I would loathe to implore of you. I well know that you love Will Clayton; yet, hard as it may seem to you, you must not marry him."

Annie looked at her father in astonishment.

"Not marry Will?" she exclaimed. "Why not? Surely, father, you must have a reason."

"I have, Annie; it is to save us from disgrace. Nay, do not start so child.

enter into conversation with her, but with little success. He remained but a short time. During his visit he attempted to ingratiate himself into the good will of his future bride, but his efforts proved unavailing.

The day on which the marriage between Annie Burton and Alf Walton was to take place finally arrived. It was a lovely morning; the winds were soft, and in the heavens the sun shone brightly, shedding its smiles on hill and dale.

Thinking that his opponent was dead, Mr. Burton fled from the country. 'This gentleman,' referring to the detective, 'is well acquainted with Mr. Howard, and is able to corroborate my statement.'

"Mr. Clayton is right," said the detective. "Mr. Howard told me of the trouble that took place between him and Mr. Burton some twenty years ago. He said that it was owing to his watch that he was not wounded. So, Mr. Walton, that matter is settled."

The officer soon afterward retired with his prisoner, who in time received his just deserts.

Annie Burton and Will Clayton were shortly afterward married. The occasion was fraught with much happiness, and all seemed to enjoy themselves. The sad expression that Mr. Burton's face had assumed, at times, has now entirely departed.

THE END.

THE LAST SIEGE OF GIBRALTAR.

ONE OF THE MIGHTY STRUGGLES OF HISTORY—THE BRITISH FIGHT FOR THE MEDITERRANEAN.

The most memorable, in some respects, of all the fourteen sieges to which Gibraltar has been subjected was the last, called the "great siege," one of the mighty struggles of history, which began in the year 1779. The famous General Elliott was commander of the fortress. Spain, in alliance with France and Morocco, endeavored to surprise Gibraltar; but a Swedish ship gave Elliott the alarm. The garrison comprised but five companies of artillery, and the whole force was less than five thousand five hundred men. The enemy's force was fourteen thousand. The siege began by the blockading of the port, and a camp was formed at San Roque with the design of starving out the garrison. When the English governor resolved to open fire upon his besiegers, a lady in the garrison fired the first shot. Never did a siege war rage more furiously than did this for nearly three years. The garrison was often reduced to sore straits for food; "a goose was worth a guinea," and Elliott tried upon himself the ex-health. Add also to your mental power and clearness. Culture and development come of the poorest circumstances and surroundings. Marry young, then and very poor.—Graphic.

The Queen at Balmoral

The Standard records its protest against the Queen going to Balmoral at the present time. It says:—"With a great war raging in Europe, with a revolution possibly imminent in France, and with serious debates constantly occurring in her own Parliament, her Majesty retires into the depths of the Highlands, six hundred miles from her capital. Should anything serious occur, therefore her Premier, an old man full of gout, must travel 1,200 miles to obtain the benefit of a personal interview. The Queen, as far as the public convenience is concerned, might almost as well leave the kingdom, and indeed at Coburg she would be quite as accessible. No blame rests, of course, upon her Majesty, who, like every other Sovereign, has been bred to think her own convenience and the welfare of her kingdom quite inseparable; but great blame rest upon successive Ministers who have failed to inform her Majesty that her highest duties can only be fittingly performed in the neighborhood of her Parliament, that time is an element in public affairs, and that by habitually withdrawing her court to a distant wilderness, she is educating her subjects to that indifference for the dynasty amidst which Republican ideas are most eagerly propagated. Using up Queen's Messengers does not matter. When they are expended there are plenty more. But experienced Ministers are more scarce, and their remaining vitality should not be exhausted on railway journey equally harassing and useless."

Killed by Lightning

Recently, during a severe lightning and thunder storm, at Newberne, N.C., two young ladies and one young man, each aged 20, were struck by a heavy discharge of electricity, and instantly killed. They were walking arm in arm from church to their homes; and a gentleman, who was a few feet behind, saw them fall as the flash struck them. The coroner found the lifeless bodies lying side by side, with arms still locked. They were walking under a steel-handled umbrella, which was found lying near the bodies (the cover partially burned), and which, undoubtedly, was what attracted the electric discharge.

Walton was here last evening, and he ed me if I would use my influence persuading you to be his wife. At I refused, but afterward, when he atened to expose a secret which I e kept for years, I reluctantly com- d. It rests with you, Annie, to bring ipiness or misery into the family. In the following day, Alf Walton call- t Mr. Burton's residence. He was at the door by the banker, and invit- within. The meeting between the men was not marked by any warmth periment of living upon four ounces of rice a day for a week. Exciting stories are told of the privateers that ran in, amidst terrible dangers, with provisions, and of the storms which threw welcome wood and cork within reach of the besieged. The Rock at one time would surely have been taken had it not been for Admiral Rodney, who, sailing off the Strait captured a small fleet of Spanish war ships and merchantmen, and clearing the Strait of besiegers, brought his prize into port. But all danger was not yet averted; Gibraltar was again blockaded; survey broke out in the garrison and Morocco refused her harbors to English ships. The enemy crept closer and closer to the fortress, but relief coming every now and then enabled the English still to hold out. The bombardments were fearful to endure "The city was almost destroyed; scarcely a house habitable, and those left standing pierced by shot and shell." At one time the desperate garrison fell to plundering the town; Elliott shot the leaders in this outrage. The long agony, full of terrific combats and frightful privations, ended by the final abandonment of the siege early in 1783. If in that year the English had to make up their minds that they must let go their American colonies, they had at least the consolation that Gibraltar was still theirs.—Harper's for June.

Always Marry Poor to get Rich

The public is advised from the pulpit to marry young, and even marry poor. Marry, young man and woman, and struggle up together. Hard times, poverty want, anxiety, worry, are good. Teach you how to live properly. Teach you how to enjoy yourself. It is good to get up in the morning and find nothing for breakfast. Not anything to buy breakfast with. Good thing for a plant, you know, to be constantly stunted of air, water, sunshine, soil. Make vigorous, healthy fruit. All the smart men commenced low down. Were poor. Opened claims, &c., and oysters. Like the present Astors and Vanderbilts, and Boston Adam's, the Lawrences. And lots of others. All young men who commence low down and struggle up, get rich and become great. Like the 150,000 tramps in the Eastern and Middle States. Want, worry, fret, anxiety, two radishes and a peanut for breakfast, make brilliant men and women. Find 'em floating in the bay every day. Suicide from want. Six last Sunday. Nobody gets discouraged. Marry, young men, and struggle up together. Everything to encourage you. Brilliant exceptions of poor young men who get rich always published in books and papers. Biographies of self-made tramps, and suicides in guilt binding not so common. About 10,000 a year. Marry poor, young man. Have five children and earn six dollars a week. Fourth story garret, two rooms, wife doing washing, bones for breakfast, make soup of them for dinner, fry the tin plates for supper. Makes you strong. Teaches you virtue, honor, honesty, self-reliance. Marry young and struggle down—to the rumshop—to the dock—to the jail—to the grave. Good things, luxuries, fresh air, country in the summer, prime roasts, airy streets, will ruin you, will de-

THE COSSACK OF THE DON.

THE FAMOUS RUSSIAN CAVALRY.

The Cossack is not a very savoury gentleman, and Galatz is a fine place for taking the edge off one's sensibilities regarding smells, and we can get to windward of the Cossack we wish to inspect, which is more than we can do in regard to the Galatz drains. Friend Cossack is a little chap, about five feet five, even on his high heels, but at once sturdy and wiry. His weatherbeaten face is shrewd, knowing, and merry. His eyes are small, but keen; his mouth large, and between it and his pug nose—rather redder than the rest of his face—is a tuft or wisp, of straw coloured moustache. His long, thick, strait hair matches his moustache in colour, and is cut sheer round by the nape of his neck. He wears a round oilskin peakless shako with a knowing cock to the right, to maintain which angle there is a strap round his chubby chin. Below the neck the Cossack is all boots and great-coat exteriorly. The great coat, which is of thick blanketing, comes down below his knees; his boots come up to them. He is more armed than any man of his inches in Europe, is our little Cossack friend, and could afford to lose a weapon or two and yet be an averagely dangerous customer. Weapon number one is the long black flagless lance, with its venomous head that seems itching to make daylight through somebody. He carries a carbine slung in an oilcloth cover on his back, the stock downwards. In his belt is a long and well made revolver in a leather case, and from the belt hangs a curved sword with no guard over its hilt. Through the chinks in his great coat are visible glimpses of a sheepskin undercoat with the hair worn inside (to day at noon the thermometer was over 70 in the sun). His whip completes his personal appurtenances; he wears no spurs. He rides cocked up on a high saddle, with a leathern band strapped over it, a wiry little rat of a poney, with no middle-piece to speak of, with an ewe neck and a gaunt, projecting head, with ragged flanks, loose hocks, limb fetlocks, shelly feet, and a general aspect of knackerism—the sort of animal, in fine, for which a costermonger would think twice before he offered "the quid" for it at the northern Tattersall's on the outskirts of the Metropolitan Cattle Market on a Friday afternoon. But the screw is of indomitable gameness and toughness—lives where most other horses would starve—is fresh when most other horses are knocked up—and is fit to carry its rider across Europe, as Cossack ponies have done before to-day. The Cossacks seem to be used indiscriminately for all sorts of work. They were the first to enter Roumania, they ride about alone with despatches, they escort suspected spies, keeping the head of their lance carefully within easy distance of the small of the subject's back to be handy for skewering him if he would attempt to escape; and the Cossacks are placed on guard over the ships at the Galatz quay to prevent their attempting departure. Dismounting and shackling his poney by a hobble on each foreleg, connected by a leather strap with another hobble around the left hind leg above the hock, the Cossack takes up a position on the extreme end of the quay

Woman's Curiosity.

A man was yesterday pushing an iron lawn roller around a yard on Woodward avenue, when an old lady came along, leaned up against the fence and watched for a while, and then called out:

"Say, Mister, what are you pushing that round for?"

"To roll the lawn," he answered.

"What do you want to roll the lawn for?"

"To make it level."

"What do you want to make it level for?" she continued.

"That's what I was ordered to do," he answered, as he wiped away the perspiration.

"But what did they order you to do it for?"

Why, they think a smooth lawn looks the best, I suppose.

"Why, do they think a smooth lawn looks the best?" she persisted.

"I haven't time to talk," he said as he started up again.

"Why haven't you time to talk?" she shouted.

"Go'n ask the boss?" he yelled.

"Why shall I go'n ask the boss?" she screamed.

He disappeared behind the house to get rid of her, and after waiting five minutes for him to reappear, she slowly sauntered off, muttering:

"Some folks are so smart and stuck up that you can't get within a mile of 'em on-less you blaze all over with dimonds." —Detroit Free Press.

The Duty of a Woman to be a Lady.

Wildness is a thing which girls cannot afford. Delicacy is a thing which cannot be lost and found. No art can restore to the "craple its bloom. Familiarity without love, without confidence, without regard, is destructive to all that makes women exalting and ennobling.

The world is wide, these things are small; They may be nothing, but they are all.

Nothing! It is a first duty of a woman to be a lady. Good breeding is good sense. Bad morals in women is immorality. Awkwardness may be ineradicable. Baseness is constitutional. Ignorance of etiquette is the result of circumstances. All can be condoned and do not barish man or woman from the amenities of their kind. But self-possessed, unshrinking and aggressive coarseness of demeanor may be reckoned as a State Prison offence, and certainly merits that mild form of restraint called imprisonment for life. It is a shame for women to be lectured on their manners. It is a bitter shame that they need it. Women are the umpires of society. It is they to whom all mooted points should be referred. To be a lady is more than to be a "prince. A lady is always in her right inalienably worthy of respect. To a lady, prince and peasant alike bow. Do not be restrained. Do not have impulses that need restraint. Do not wish to dance with the prince unsought; feel differently. Be such that you confer an honor. Carry yourself so loftily that men shall look up to you for reward, not at you in rebuke. The natural sentiment of man toward women is reverence. He loses a large means of grace when he is obliged to account her a being to be trained into propriety. A man's ideal is not wounded when a woman fails in worldly wisdom, but if in grace, in tact, in sentiment, in delicacy, in kindness should be found wanting, he receives an inward hurt.—Gail Hamilton.

Burton's heart throbbed violently, his face changed color as Annie uttered these words.

"I'll admit, Annie, that it looks considerably reason that Mr. Clayton should have written this. But what in regard to the ring?"

"I remember, father, the ring that I saw presented to me just before I left. It is lost, and I have been unable to find it. It is my impression that it is stolen."

Afterward, Mr. Burton arose from the house, first promising Annie that he would endeavor to regain possession of the ring that she had lost.

In spite of Annie's promise to her to marry Alf Walton, she did not permit herself to be carried away by the momentary ardor from her heart that she bore Will Clayton. It was a lovely day; the winds were soft, and in the sun shone brightly, shedding light on hill and dale.

At 10 o'clock, Walton arrived at the house and shortly afterward the clergyman opened the parlor where the entire were assembled. The marriage ceremony then commenced. The minister opened the bible when the ringing of the door bell on the ears of the present.

"Come in!" said Walton, nervously.

Burton arose and went to the door to answer the summons. In a short time, accompanied by two men, one of them, and Will Clayton.

"What do you want?" said the officer, "you are a prisoner; I arrest you on the charge of burglary—for breaking into the store of Wilson's on the night of the 15th."

Burton turned to Mr. Clayton, and, in the bitterness of his soul, said: "I never mind, Mr. Burton, your time will come."

"What do you refer to?" asked Clayton.

He was glad to state that your prepossession, father-in-law murdered Charles, some twenty years ago in the Cleveland," said Walton.

"Now, Mr. Walton, to disabuse you of such an impression. Mr. Burton was not killed, as you think, nor was he in Boston. Thinking of an opponent was dead, Mr. Burton in the country. "This gentleman," said the detective, "is well acquainted with Mr. Howard, and is able to corroborate my statement."

"Clayton is right," said the detective. "Mr. Howard told me of the fact that took place between him and Burton some twenty years ago. He at that time was owing to his watch that not wounded. So, Mr. Walton, the matter is settled."

The officer soon afterward retired with his son, who in time received his share.

A Clerical Dramatist

The gospel, the whole gospel, and nothing but the gospel; that is what the worthy elders of Ayr will have. The minister of the parish of Riccarton Eng. is over-tired of Shakespeare, and on April 15th used a quotation from Othello in rounding off his sermon. Four elders resolved to resign their offices and to "worship" somewhere else, where the truths of the gospel required not to be illustrated or enforced by quotations from the obscene conversation of Iago and Othello. It was not that he preached Shakespeare, but that he preached Shakespeare at them. There was the rub. There had been a misunderstanding at a public meeting, and he had stopped the mouths of the elders by closing the exercise abruptly with prayer, and on the following Sunday had preached at them, as I made a cowardly attack upon them by flinging Shakespeare at their heads. The elders have carried the complaint before the Presbytery, the minister has pleaded not guilty, and a committee has been appointed to smooth these unhappy differences. The quotation from Othello was this:

"If thou dost slander her, and torture me, Never pray more; abandon all remorse: On horror's head horrors accumulate: Do deeds to make Heaven weep, fall earth amazed: For nothing canst thou to damnation add Greater than that."

The Queen at Balmoral

The Spectator records its protest against the Queen going to Balmoral at the present time. It says:—"With a great war raging in Europe, with a revolution possibly imminent in France, and with serious debates constantly occurring in her own Parliament, her Majesty retires into the depths of the Highlands, six hundred miles from her capital. Should anything serious occur, therefore her Premier, an old man full of gout, must travel 1,200 miles to obtain the benefit of a personal interview. The Queen, as far as the public convenience is concerned, might almost as well leave the kingdom, and indeed at Coburg she would be quite as accessible. No blame rests of course upon her Majesty, who

He will accept a cigarette, and tender you a light from his in the friendliest manner, but you will never coax him to take his eye for a single minute off the ship which he has in custody. The Circassian Cossacks who marched in to-day differ in some respects from the Don Cossacks. INDISCRIMINATE CHARITY.

It is evident from letters that have been written to the newspapers during this winter that there are those who sincerely think that careful inquiry regarding poverty, and regulations of relief based upon it, must somehow deaden human sympathy and deepen the suffering of the poor. This is so ingeniously incorrect a theory that it would be exceedingly amusing if it were not so sincere and even general. The very first thing that careful investigation accomplishes is to acquaint the comfortable class with the real condition of the suffering, and to show the latter that they are not forsaken or turned off with uninquiring alms. They are conscious of an intelligent sympathy with which falsehood will be of no avail. They are taught self-respect by the preception that they are not forsaken, and self-respect is the mainspring of successful exertion. When the street beggar understands that his tale will be tested, that if he needs succor he will surely receive it, and that if his plea is but asking for a dram he will not receive, the number of street beggars will sensibly decrease. And the sturdy tramp and professional pauper, when they know that they must go to the work-house or starve, will often conclude that even work is better than the poor-house, and they too will cease to be a nuisance and a terror.

Nor need it be feared, on the other hand, that if irresponsible street giving is stopped, nobody will investigate the actual situation of the poor. What is asked of the street giver is not that he closes his pockets and his heart and his soul, but that, if he will not take the trouble to inquire before giving, he will give his alms to somebody who will take that trouble, that his alms may be true to charity, and relieve suffering.

EXCITING SCENE.

Lieutenant-Colonel Ross made a stirring speech at the review of this regiment at Fort George (Inverness), on May the second. Nearly seven hundred men were under arms, and at the close of the movements the force was drawn up in a square, and the Lieutenant-Colonel, after speaking of the war between Russia and Turkey, intimated to the men that they might possibly be called out for active service before the annual period of training. In such a case, he trusted that every man would turn out, and that there would be none hanging behind. Should this summons arrive, he would say to them, in the spirit stirring words which had been set to one of the most beautiful of the Highland pibrochs:—

"Leave uncared the herd, leave flock without shelter,
Leave the corpse uninterred, leave the while at the altar,
Leave the deer, leave the steer, leave the nets and the barge,
Come in your fighting gear, broad swords and targes."

Colonel Ross then expressed a desire that they would indicate how many would come forward to fight for their country. Those willing to fight would "slope arms," those desiring to remain at home would "order arms," while the officers desirous to fight would "uncover arms." In an instant, the entire rank and file sloped arms, and the officers unsheathed their swords amid the ringing cheers from the spectators.—The Broad Arrow.

Who is to Head the British Army?

(London World.)

Hence it is permitted to descend to the major-generals for a commander, Sir Garnet Wolseley's name stands out so prominently above all others, both from his experience of war, his remarkable talents, and the popularity which he enjoys in the country at large, that he must infallibly be chosen. There is no man in the whole army who would so thoroughly command the confidence of the soldiers of modern ideas, or who would be so acceptable to the country at large. He has seen more campaigns than any other officer in the army, and on two occasions has commanded most difficult expeditions with signal success.

All those who have come directly in contact with him swear by him, and would follow him blindfold to death. But he has cloven his way through his contemporaries by his energy and skill, and professional jealousy is aroused against him. It remains to be seen whether the Cabinet, if it should have to undertake this great and solemn task, will have the courage to put aside the law of seniority in order to choose the most competent man. If the selection were left to the Horse Guards nobody under seventy would have a chance of command, and a boy like Sir Garnet Wolseley, whom we judge to be just the

Using up Queen's Messengers does not matter. When they are expended there are plenty more. But experienced Ministers are more scarce, and their remaining vitality should not be exhausted on railway journey equally harassing and useless."

Killed by Lightning.

Recently, during a severe lightning and thunder storm, at Newbern, N.C., two young ladies and one young man, each aged 20, were struck by a heavy discharge of electricity, and instantly killed. They were walking arm in arm from church to their homes; and a gentleman, who was a few feet behind, saw them fall as the flash struck them. The coroner found the lifeless bodies lying side by side, with arms still locked. They were walking under a steel-handled umbrella, which was found lying near the bodies (the cover partially burned), and which, undoubtedly, was what attracted the electric discharge.

The street giver must first of all clear his mind of cant. He must cease to be a Pharisee. He must see that he is not a good Christian exercising the heavenly gift of charity, but an indolent and reckless citizen who is promoting poverty and multiplying the public burdens of the honest poor. He is that lazy, absurd boy who wishes to eat his cake and have it. He would satisfy his soul that he is as good because he gives, without seeing that to give ignorantly is, socially, to be bad. Nobody is exhorted to surrender inquiry to others. Every one may enquire for himself. If a beggar stops you and asks for a penny in the name of God, and says that his family is starving, go and see if it is so. If you have not the time or—O, sophisticated Sybarite—inclination, send him to those who, as you know, will inquire. Will his family starve in the meantime? That is something you do not believe yourself. Do you fear that the visitor will not go? Then go yourself. Do your engagements prevent? Then you know that it is a thousand to one the story is but a plea for whiskey. Will you take the chance? Then you become an immediate accomplice in the vast multiplication of hereditary pauperism and crime. The pretense of your giving is Christian charity and humanity, the real cause is indolent self indulgence and saving yourself trouble.—Harper's Magazine.

(London World.)

Hence it is permitted to descend to the major-generals for a commander, Sir Garnet Wolseley's name stands out so prominently above all others, both from his experience of war, his remarkable talents, and the popularity which he enjoys in the country at large, that he must infallibly be chosen. There is no man in the whole army who would so thoroughly command the confidence of the soldiers of modern ideas, or who would be so acceptable to the country at large. He has seen more campaigns than any other officer in the army, and on two occasions has commanded most difficult expeditions with signal success.

All those who have come directly in contact with him swear by him, and would follow him blindfold to death. But he has cloven his way through his contemporaries by his energy and skill, and professional jealousy is aroused against him. It remains to be seen whether the Cabinet, if it should have to undertake this great and solemn task, will have the courage to put aside the law of seniority in order to choose the most competent man. If the selection were left to the Horse Guards nobody under seventy would have a chance of command, and a boy like Sir Garnet Wolseley, whom we judge to be just the age that Wellington was at Salamanca, would of course be out of the question; but as a suggestion for the Cabinet we would remark that the average age of Wellington's generals in the Peninsula was only a trifle over forty.

There is a custom in Germany—and they fight well there—of giving the command of the national armies to the princes of the blood royal, with the most able soldiers of the day at their right hand. The presence of the prince animates the loyal breasts of the troops, and in his name orders are issued, but the conduct of the campaign rests with the general who is chief of the staff. Thus Blumenthal acted with the Crown Prince of Prussia. The Duke of Cambridge is not to be thought of; his health makes his going on active service out of the question. The Duke of Connaught is but a colonel of a few years' service; but we have a field marshal who has shown, not merely in the hunting-field, but in the most arduous and severe work in India, marvellous powers of endurance—a Prince whom the nation adores; and the heart of the British people would throb with one huge beat of joy if it knew that, if we must go to war, the Prince of Wales would take command of the army, with Wolseley as chief of the staff.

Native capitalists in China, supported by high officials, are endeavouring to get control of the great trading interests, steamship lines, &c., by extensive purchases with the avowed object of gradually wresting the commercial supremacy from foreign hands.

THE CASTLETON TRAGEDY, CONCLUSION OF THE INQUEST.

Verdict Against Smith, Welton, and Mallory.

Last week we gave a succinct account of the murder, and now give the conclusion of the evidence, all of which was condensed from the Globe, Mail, Ensign, and other papers, omitting nothing but the dry and tedious details.

Old Smith's confession, reveals a case of heartless brutality, which would disgrace a Turkish barbarian. Through his ignorance and inhumanity, he, by the obscure fire-light of his miserable hovel, attempted a surgical operation, which, under the watchful eyes of the highest professional skill, is considered critical and dangerous in the extreme, and which resulted in the death of his victim.

CASTLETON, Township of Gramahie, June 5. The inquest touching the alleged murder of Alberta Wade at this village on May 26th, was continued to-day before Drs. Fife and Gould, coroners. The proceedings took place in the Town Hall, a dilapidated building in the centre of the village. The greatest excitement prevailed all day, the village being crowded with persons from the surrounding country. The hall in which the inquest was held was filled to excess; the window sashes being all removed and the window frame being made to serve as benches for the accommodation of men and boys eager to hear the evidence. The prisoner Marvin Smith was in attendance, also Smith, who performed the abortionist's work, that being the immediate cause of the death of the young girl. After his arrest, which took place on Thursday last, he preserved a very sullen demeanour, and it was not till after he heard the evidence adduced on Friday, which pointed clearly to the fact that an abortion had been attempted, and that he was the guilty party, that he considered it worth his while to do anything in the matter. He then came to the conclusion that he had better make a clean breast of it in the expectation, some says, of turning Queen's evidence. Another consideration which, it is said, led him to make his confession, was that he feared his companions in crime would go unwhipped of justice, and while he was not unwilling to suffer himself, he was determined that those whose tool he was in the nefarious work should not easily escape. During the afternoon of Friday he voluntarily corroborated a statement made by a Mrs. Miller, a woman who lived opposite him, to the effect that the girl had been taken to his hut by two young men. It was, however, on the way to Cobourg that her on the bed when operating; Welton held her with his arm around her neck; after Smith thought that he had done the work he made a fire to look at his instrument; when doing this Welton called out that she had fainted away; Smith asked what Welton was going to do; he said he would go for Mallory; these two, Mallory and Welton, carried the girl off, and Mr. (Smith) did not know whether she had come to or not; he did not know what happened afterwards; he supposed that they had gone to the buggy; Smith said he had burned the veil and knots; Welton went back on Tuesday and saw Smith; he asked Smith if there had been any inquiry regarding the girl, Smith said there had not been, and Smith then asked if he had been secured; Welton replied, "I think we have"; this happened on the road to Grafton.

Smith was not induced to make the confession; did not tell him that it would be better for him in the long run if he told all; Smith admitted that when Bertha Wade was lying in Welton's arms he used the instruments once or twice and that on looking at them he saw blood on one; he then said that "he had got her now," but then added that he would make sure and he blew some air into the womb. Immediately after this operation the girl dropped over dead. During the operation the girl complained of pain in her back; Smith told her that "that was the place where it ought to hurt."

When asked if Miss Wade got the blow when the operation was being performed; Smith said that no blow had been given her in the house; would not acknowledge occasioning the marks on the thighs; said there was another party, but would not give the name; kept saying that Cope was not so much to blame; Smith said that the burying had not been done very well; if he had had anything to do with it he would have thrown her into the mill-pond; witness said to Smith "You couldn't sleep last night," and Smith replied, "You bet I did;" witness wished to deny the truth of the impression that he had given Smith whiskey to get the confession out of him.

THE VERDICT.

CORNER FIVE addressed the jury, and took occasion to remark on the extremely orderly conduct which had characterized the large assemblage. He said that the evidence was full and pointed.

The Jury were left to themselves, and after an interval of two hours and a half returned the following verdict:—"We the undersigned jurors, empanelled to enquire as to the manner by which Alberta Wade came to her death, upon their oath present, that the said Alberta Wade came to her death by an attempt to procure abortion on her person by one David Smith, assisted by Marvin Welton and John Cope Mallory, on Friday night, the 25th May, A. D. 1877."

Smith was not presented during the investigation, he having been committed for trial by the Coroner previously. The usual formalities for the commitment of Welton were followed. After the jury had returned the verdict it was read from the Town Hall steps to a crowd of not less than a thousand people. Welton had an interview with his wife and two children, after which he was taken in a covered conveyance to Cobourg gaol.

Cope Mallory is being hotly pursued by the detectives in Michigan.

THE WAR NEWS.

HOBART PASHA WILL BOMBARD ODESSA.

A Correspondent of the Whitehall Review, writing from Pera, says:—"Hobart Pasha, I hear seriously intends bombard Odessa. He believes he can fish up or explode the torpedoes without very great difficulty. At any rate, he says he will try to do so. The gallant back on the resolutions of the Constantinople Conference and demand for such guarantees as will ensure the efficiency of the reforms, asking the Powers to take up the thread where it was broken by the dissolution of the Conference.

ARRIVAL OF THE CZAR AT PHLOESTI.

The arrival of the Czar at Phloesti, on the 9th, was made the occasion of one of the grandest fetes on record. The scene at the railway station was indescribable. The populace and staff officers and foreign military attaches united in the welcome.

Several specials confirmed the report that Bucharest is about to be proclaimed in state of siege. The Russian police, owing to the reputation of Roumanian as gathering place of Poles and turbulent characters, deemed it necessary to take severe precautions for the Czar's safety. Besides sending a host of secret police they demand the unlimited right of arresting suspicious individuals. Roumanian refused this because it was a direct violation both of the Russo-Roumanian Convention and the constitution. The Grand Duke Nicholas manifested his displeasure by not noticing the Prime Minister and Foreign Minister when the went to meet him on his last visit to Bucharest. The Roumanian Government will probably consent to proclaim state of siege, which would permit exceptional measures desired. The Russians are complaining of the ill-will and dilatoriness of the Roumanians, and the latter of the offensive and almost brutal behaviour of the Russian officers.

ENGLAND'S POSITION.

The rumour that Lord Derby has not invited the Czar that as soon as the Russians cross the Danube England will seize Egypt and hold her as a hostage for the safety of the Suez Canal, have sent Egyptian bonds up 5 per cent.

In London military circles there is a renewal of the uneasiness which prevailed when Russia declared war, as to the part this country will shortly be called on to take. This feeling has been strengthened by the general conviction of high military authorities that Russia will be completely successful and dictate her own terms to Turkey. At one or two regimental dinners officers of the highest rank expressed fears that England would soon be a war, and that so far, little has been done to prepare for the evil day. The belief is also growing that our Government will be left to carry out and defend its own policy; that Austria, which is only a probable ally, cannot be depended upon, and therefore it would be wiser and fairer if the Premier and Cabinet would frankly declare what they will do if the Russian troops directly threaten Constantinople either in Europe or Asia.

PEACE NEGOTIATIONS.

A Berlin special says:—"The arrival of Sidoulah Bey, the new Turkish ambassador to Berlin, who leaves Constantinople to-morrow, is looked forward to as an event of importance, for, I believe the German Government will, with the concurrence of England, advise Turkey to conclude peace as soon as possible. Russia having already informed the Cabinets at London, Vienna and Berlin that she would agree to conclude peace on the basis of the protocol, accepting a concession of territory in Asia Minor in stead of an indemnity.

Austria has finally commenced an earnest mobilization of her army, and the equipment of her navy, and is undoubtedly a party to a secret treaty between Germany and Russia. The same authority asserts that a serious division in the English Cabinet is reported, Lord Salisbury is opposed to warlike action. Notwithstanding her preparations, it is evident that England is not so ready for offensive operations as the War Secretary professes. The Queen's continued absence is still causing great dissatisfaction. Earl Grey remonstrated with her on the occasion of her coming

THE EXPRESS.

NAPANEE, JUNE, 15th 1877.

RECENT FIRES.

It would seem as though fires have their seasons as the leaves have their time to fall, but the visitations are so certain that there are no special providing against them. The only sure plan is to be always prepared; and insurance companies, who have suffered so much of late, must adopt the only safe remedy, which is entirely in their own hands—to combine against underwriting extra hazardous risks at any price. The scenes of the late fires in New Brunswick have recently been visited by one of our most experienced underwriters, and his opinions coincide exactly with ours in this respect.

A prominent cause of the evil of reckless underwriting are the different sub-agents, whose chief end is the earning of their commissions, and this they will accomplish at any risk to the company; the more hazardous the risk, the greater the commission. The shrinkage in the value of real estate and building materials should be borne in mind, and risks written for proportionately less amounts. St. Stephen, N. B., escaped total destruction, simply because the fire caught near the end of the principal street towards which the wind was blowing at the time. Had it blown in the opposite direction, no human power could arrest the total destruction of the place, as the entire town is built of that material in the manufacture of which the mass of the inhabitants find employment. We have seen lately in this city how ineffectual sometimes are the most thorough preparations for extinguishing fires, once they obtain headway, even when the buildings are of brick and stone; and it can only be a question of time till the greater number of all those carelessly constructed wooden villages meets with the fate of St. Johns, Que., and many villages in Ontario that have learnt wisdom from dire experience. Companies should unite in avoiding such places, and they would soon see that a better class of buildings built with reference to their surroundings would take the place of the tinder boxes which keep our companies in continual dread of awakening some morning to find themselves also wiped out of existence. No rate of insurance can pay one hundred per cent., and few of the extra hazardous and high rate buildings insured to-day can hope to escape long enough under ordinary circumstances to pay for their eventual loss.

prevailed airily, the village being crowded with persons from the surrounding country. The hall in which the inquest was held was filled to excess; the window sashes being all removed and the window frame being made to serve as benches for the accommodation of men and boys eager to hear the evidence. The prisoner Marvin Welton was in attendance, also Smith, who performed the abortionist's work, that being the immediate cause of the death of the young girl. During the afternoon of Friday he voluntarily corroborated a statement made by a Mrs. Miller, a woman who lived opposite him, to the effect that the girl had been taken to his hut by two young men. It was, however, on the way to Cobourg that he made his confession proper, and in that confession he implicated Marvin Welton and John Cope Mallory, alleging that he made the statement because he did not think he had been properly dealt with, one of his accomplices having been admitted to bail and the other having escaped. In consequence of the confession the coroner immediately committed the man for trial.

THE POST MORTEM—THE INSTRUMENTS USED.

The result of the post mortem examination made by Drs. Willoughby, Dean, Douglas, Thorburn, and Richards, was read. It stated that there was a bruise on the surface of the right temple, about an inch and a half in width, which had evidently been made just prior to death. The anterior of the neck was very much discoloured, and both shoulders presented marks of violence. The eyes were fully blown. On both thighs were severe lacerations, some of them appearing to have been made recently, and others appearing to have been made earlier. There were also marks on each thigh two inches wide, as if made by a band. The internal organs were in a healthy condition. The genital organs presented signs of an attempt to procure an abortion. They were extensively lacerated. The internal parts of the womb were found to be lacerated, and pierced in a number of places as if by a blunt instrument. Other evidences of procuring by such an instrument were present. The membranes were intact, and enveloped in them was a foetus about four months old. There were other marks of violence on the body.

The doctors gave it as their opinion that death was caused by the immediate effect of a mechanical attempt to procure an abortion, but it was hastened by a severe blow on the right temple.

Constable Ingersoll testified to the discovery of certain instruments at Smith's hut. He went to the hut in consequence of something that Smith in confession had told the other constables. Upon digging under a threshold in obedience to the instructions of Smith, he found five instruments. (The instruments, which consisted of a No. 11 gun, a cast-iron catheter, a stiletto, and three steel instruments, all of which were stained with blood, were produced.)

BURIAL OF THE BODY.

The body of Miss Alberta Wade was brought from Castleton immediately after the post mortem examination on Thursday, and received Christian burial in Mount Hope Cemetery, Brighton, on Friday the 1st June, at ten o'clock a. m., followed by a large number of sympathizing relations and friends.

returned the following verdict:—"We the undersigned jurors, empanelled to enquire as to the manner by which Alberta Wade came to her death, upon their oath present, that the said Alberta Wade came to her death by an attempt to procure abortion on her person by one David Smith, assisted by Marvin Welton and John Cope Mallory, on Friday night, the 25th May, A. THE WAR NEWS.

ROBERT PASHA WILL BOMBARD ODESSA.

A correspondent of the Whitehall Review, writing from Pera, says:—"Hobart Pasha, I hear seriously intends bombard Odesa. He believes he can fish up or explode the torpedoes without very great difficulty. At any rate, he says he will try to do so. The gallant Admiral, whose abilities have never been fully recognized, before, is at length so highly thought of that he has received from the Sultan's own hands the commission to command both the Mediterranean and the black Sea fleets. He will thus have to place the ships as he thinks best, and so time his attacks, if possible, as to command either in any great action—a task by no means so easy as it may seem to the Turks."

TURKEY.

Turkey has had a windfall of $8,600,000 in the shape of the accumulations which generations of pilgrims have heaped up on the altar of the shrine at Mecca. This vast sum will enable the Porte to complete the equipment of its armies with modern firearms and artillery, which it has thus far lacked the means, and with it the credit to obtain. The gift shows how profoundly the Mohammedan hierarchy appreciates the fact that Turkey's struggle for existence is also their own, and that the eastern extension of the Russian Empire means the certain suppression of the Mohammedan faith.

In consequence of the remonstrance of Christian dignitaries against pressing Christians to fight in the Holy Moslem war, the Porte has postponed the conscription of Christian subjects, and commenced to levy exemption money.

A special from Pera reports that Hobart Pasha has captured three Greek grain ships which were endeavoring to run the blockade of Kertch.

DEFEAT OF THE TURKS—IMMENSE LOSS.

On the 4th inst., the Turks attacked the Montenegrins at Krustaz. They fell into a trap and were completely repulsed, leaving 3,000 dead on the field. The Montenegrins fought against enormous odds, their loss was about 500. Both sides fought with great bravery.

TURKISH VICTORIES.

The Turks defeated the Montenegrins on the 7th after a six hours' battle, capturing Kanstaki, at the entrance to the Duga Pass.

In an encounter between six Russian torpedo boats and some Turkish ironclads at the Sulina mouth of the Danube. The torpedo boats were beaten off, three were destroyed and some prisoners taken. One of the iron clads was injured.

RUSSIA.

An Odesa correspondent writes that there is no longer any fear there of the Turkish fleet. Confidence has been completely restored. The Russian Government has now refused to acknowledge the blockade, and proposes to resume the running of steamers between Odesa and Kherson, and Odesa and Nicolaieff.

able ally, cannot be depended upon, and therefore it would be wiser and fairer if the Premier and Cabinet would frankly declare what they will do if the Russian troops directly threaten Constantinople, either in Europe or Asia.

Austria has finally commenced an earnest mobilization of her army, and the equipment of her navy, and is undoubtedly a party to a secret treaty between Germany and Russia. The same authority asserts that a serious division in the English Cabinet is reported. Lord Salisbury is opposed to warlike action. Notwithstanding her preparations, it is evident that England is not so ready for offensive operations as her War Secretary professes. The Queen's continued absence is still causing great dissatisfaction. Earl Grey remonstrated with her on the impolicy of her course.

LONDON, June 11.—At the banquet of the Merchant Taylor's School to-night Lord Derby and Salisbury spoke in a remarkable pacific tone.

Lord Salisbury said:—"I am far myself from sharing many of the apprehensions which I hear around me. It may be our duty in possible contingencies to put forth our strength to defend indirect interests, but caution, and extreme caution, is necessary before the Government risks wealth, prosperity, and freedom, and breaks the peace of the world, not in pursuit of real honor, but for a theory and a dream."

Lord Derby said the greatest of all British interests is the interest of peace.

ROBBERY AND MASSACRE.

The house of 159 Jewish families were pillaged by a mob at Dowbani in Roumania on Sunday the 3rd inst. Eleven were killed, twenty four wounded, and 90,000 denars stolen. The news is confirmed that the Circassians in Thessaly pillaged the monastery of Rogane, and killed the Monks.

England's Policy Respecting the Suez Canal

Lord Derby informs, Lord Lyons, the British ambassador at Paris, that Great Britain had declined the proposal of De Lesseps to keep open the Suez canal to all nations, and had intimated to Russia that any attempt to blockade, or otherwise interfere with the canal, or its approaches, would be regarded as a menace to India, and a grave injury to the commerce of the world, incompatible with the maintenance of the British attitude of passive neutrality. At the same time it was intimated to the Porte and Khedive that England was firmly determined not to permit the canal to be made the scene of any combat, or other warlike operations.

Russia has agreed to observe the maritime declaration of the Treaty of Paris both as regards the nations directly interested and also with reference to Spain and America. The Powers have neither asked for nor given any opinion with reference to Lord Derby's reply to Fortschakoff's circular.

Words of Approval

Next to words of approval respecting ourselves, we are always pleased to meet with such expressions of appreciation in respect to persons and institutions in which we take a lively interest, and for whom or which we have felt it our duty from time to time to say a good word. We have spoken our mind pretty freely about the Travellers Life and Accident Insurance Company of Hartford, which

Let every agent look at a risk in this light—how long is that row of buildings likely to last? Let long rows of wooden dwellings and stores, even in villages with ordinary fire apparatus, be as much avoided as old idle saw mills are avoided, and we shall have the satisfaction of seeing a more substantial class of buildings erected, and the stock of insurance companies again approaching a reasonable value and legitimately paying comfortable dividends to the meantime unfortunate shareholders. These precautions are due not only to the companies themselves, but also to the thousands of owners of comparatively safe properties who may be dependent on the solvency of the institution wherein they are insured.—Journal of Commerce.

John A's "Greatest Show on Earth."

BARNUM OUT-BARNUMED.

(From the Kingston Whig.

The Whig, in the eyes of the Tories, committed a grave-impropriety when it coupled Sir John with Barnum, and referred to one as the rival showman of the other. But what must be thought of Grip which sinned so far as to actually supply a pictorial sketch of "John A's greatest show on earth"—with Barnum out-Barnumed. First we have the six most obedient horses on earth, exhibited by the Sir John himself, and made to out-do the famous Trakone stallions in their tricks. The horses have heads very like those of Patteson; (Mail) M. C. Cameron, W. McDougall, Hon. Mr. Gibbs, Pratt and Tupper. Next we find the great Sir John in his champion bareback act of escaped. In consequence of the confession the coroner immediately committed the man for trial.

THE POST-MORTEM—THE INSTRUMENTS USED.

The result of the post-mortem examination made by Drs. Willoughby, Dean, Douglas, Thorburn, and Richards, was read. It stated that there was a bruise on the surface of the right temple, about an inch and a half in width, which had evidently been made just prior to death. The anterior of the neck was very much discoloured, and both shoulders presented marks of violence. The eyes were fully blown. On both thighs were severe lacerations, some of them appearing to have been made recently, and others appearing to have been made earlier. There were also marks on each thigh two inches wide, as it made by a band. The internal organs were in a healthy condition. The genital organs presented signs of an attempt to procure an abortion. They were extensively lacerated. The internal parts of the womb were found to be lacerated, and pierced in a number of places as if by a blunt instrument. Other evidences of piercing by such an instrument were present. The membranes were intact, and enveloped in them was a foetus about four months old. There were other marks of violence on the body.

The doctor gave it as their opinion that death was caused by the immediate effect of a mechanical attempt to procure an abortion, but it was hastened by a severe blow on the right temple.

Constable Isaacson testified to the discovery of certain instruments at Smith's hut. He went to the hut in consequence of something that Smith in confession had told the other constables. Upon digging under a threshold in obedience to the instructions of Smith, he found five instruments. (The instruments, which consisted of a No. 11 gunnastic catheter, a stiletto, and three steel instruments, all of which were stained with blood, were produced.)

BURIAL OF THE BODY.

The body of Miss Alberta Wade was brought from Castleton immediately after the post-mortem examination on Thursday, and received Christian burial in Mount Hope Cemetery, Brighton, on Friday the 1st June, at ten o'clock a. m., followed by a large number of sympathizing relations and friends.

A FURNERIAL SERMON

was preached in the C. M. Church, Hilton, on Sunday 3rd, by the Rev. Mr. Dorrise of Smithfield. The church was completely jammed; the edifice being filled with the female portion of the congregation, while the men in a large body, surrounded the open windows and doors, and listened attentively to a powerful discourse delivered in the stentorian voice of the preacher.

OLD LAVE'S DEN BURNED.

On Saturday night, the 2nd inst., this nest of sin and iniquity was discovered to be in flames, and in a short time was burned to the ground. It is supposed to have been done by some friends of the old rascal to destroy any lingering evidences that might have existed to bring to light his numerous crimes, or through hatred towards the monster of iniquity.

DAVID SMITH'S CONFESSION.

given to police constable Casey on the way to goal.

Mail-bry and Welton had on Tuesday night brought the girl to the woods near Smith's house; Smith denied making a successful operation at the first time when in the wood; he then operated for about twenty minutes, after which he gave it up and said that he would have to have a better place. We declined having anything more to do with it that night. Friday night was then appointed for them to come to his shanty; Welton came with the girl to the shanty about twelve o'clock, and Smith operated upon the young lady that night. They took the young lady into the house and put best, and so time his attacks, if possible, as to command either in any great action—a task by no means so easy as it may seem to the Turks.

TURKEY.

Turkey has had a windfall of $8,600,000 in the shape of the accumulations which generations of pilgrims have heaped up on the altar of the shrine at Mecca. This vast sum will enable the Porte to complete the equipment of its armies with modern firearms and artillery, which it has thus far lacked the means, and with it the credit to obtain. The gift shows how profoundly the Mohammedan hierarchy appreciates the fact that Turkey's struggle for existence is also their own, and that the eastern extension of the Russian Empire means the certain suppression of the Mohammedan faith.

In consequence of the remonstrance of Christian dignitaries against pressing Christians to fight in the Holy Moslem war, the Porte has postponed the conscription of Christian subjects, and commenced to levy exemption money.

A special from Pera reports that Hobar Pasha has captured three Greek grain ships which were endeavoring to run the blockade of Kerch.

DEFEAT OF THE TURKS—IMMENSE LOSS.

On the 4th inst., the Turks attacked the Montenegrins at Krustaz. They fell into a trap and were completely repulsed, leaving 3,000 dead on the field. The Montenegrins fought against enormous odds, their loss was about 500. Both sides fought with great bravery.

TURKISH VICTORIES.

The Turks defeated the Montenegrins on the 7th after a six hours' battle, capturing Kanstakh, at the entrance to the Duga Pass.

In an encounter between six Russian torpedo boats and some Turkish iron-clads at the Sulina mouth of the Danube. The torpedo boats were beaten off, three were destroyed and some prisoners taken. One of the iron-clads was injured.

RUSSIA.

An Odessa correspondent writes that there is no longer any fear there of the Turkish fleet. Confidence has been completely restored. The Russian Government has now refused to acknowledge the blockade, and proposes to resume the running of steamers between Odessa and Kherson, and Odessa and Nicolaieff.

A court-martial will try the Circassian regiments in the Russian service which mutinied and refused to fight against their Moslem co-religionists. A severe example will be made. The revolt among Circassian regiments in Roumania is spreading.

A Vienna despatch says in military circles the opinion gains that the Russians will not cross the Danube. They expect such decisive success in Asia that every condition of durable peace may be secured from their effects.

RUSSIA'S PROGRAMME.

The Paris correspondent states that Count Schouvaloff brings to London a letter from Gortschakoff in reply to Lord Derby. Gortschakoff explains that Russia does not mean to interfere with any English interests. He acknowledges the great international and commercial importance of the Suez Canal, and gives the most positive assurances that Russia does not intend in any way to touch it. Russia, indeed, thinks herself entitled as a matter of right, to carry the war to Egypt, but explains that any action in that direction has never been taken into consideration. Russia thinks that so important a maritime passage as the Dardanelles must always be regulated by international agreement and not by one power alone. She disclaims any intention of acquiring Constantinople, though at the same time she could not consent to its possession by any other Christian Power. The letter goes on to say that Russia has remained true to her programme, in aiming solely at improving the condition of the Christians in Turkey, which can only be done by coercing the Porte. As soon as Russia has achieved this she will fall sions which I hear around me. It be our duty in possible contingencies put forth our strength to defend our interests, but caution, and extreme caution, is necessary before the Government risks wealth, prosperity, and free and breaks the peace of the world, in pursuit of real honor, but for a th and a dream."

Lord Derby said the greatest of British interests is the interest of p

ROBBERY AND MASSACRE.

The house of 159 Jewish families pillaged by a mob at Dowbari in mania on Sunday the 3rd inst. Eleven were killed, twenty four wounded, 90,000 ducats stolen. The news is firm that the Circassians in the pillaged the monastery of Ragane, killed the Monks.

England's Policy Respecting Suez Canal

Lord Derby informs, Lord Lyons British ambassador at Paris, that Great Britain had declined the proposal of Lesseps to keep open the Suez canal all nations, and had intimated to R that any attempt to blockade, or otherwise interfere with the canal, or approaches, would be regarded as a menace to India, and a grave injury to the commerce of the world, incompatible with the maintenance of the British attitude of passive neutrality. At the same time it was intimated to the Lord and Khedive that England was determined not to permit the canal to be the scene of any combat, or warlike operations.

Russia has agreed to observe the terms of the declaration of the Treaty of 1848 as regards the nations directly interested and also with reference to America. The Powers have not asked for nor given any opinion with reference to Lord Derby's reply to Gortschakoff's circular.

Words of Approval

Next to words of approval respect ourselves, we are always pleased to see with such expressions of appreciation respect to persons and institutions which we take a lively interest, and whom or which we have felt it our duty from time to time to say a good word. We have spoken our mind pretty fully about the Travellers Life and Accident Insurance Company of Hartford, and are doing such a large business in country, and of which Mr. Hanson is agent in this town. It may be that some of our readers imagine that we have allowed our partiality to this excellent company to carry us too far; but if of them will take the trouble to read following opinions of the press, they will probably come to a different conclusion.

The TRAVELLERS continues to show same conservative management it always exhibited. The wisdom of direction is in broad contrast with recklessness which has elsewhere resulted in such disastrous failure.—Bulletin Underwriter.

The TRAVELLERS passed through recent fire that enveloped life insurance without so much as a scorch upon garments. It is to-day stronger than ever was, and as its management is as well as enterprising, it may be expected to increase in strength, and to continually widen its field of usefulness.—Toledo Blade.

Its able and conservative management for the thirteenth year of its existence presents a marked contrast to that which has wrecked several life companies seriously impaired the standing of others.—The Public.

The TRAVELLERS has a most honorable reputation for safe management, liberal dealing, and is able to do what promises.—Philadelphia Times.

The TRAVELLERS leaves nothing to be desired in the way of unequivocal contracts, low rates of premium, and prompt payment of losses, while its reputation for honest and fair dealing is second none in the land.—St. Louis Globe.

her on the bed when operating; Welton held her with his arm around her neck; after Smith thought that he had done the work he made a fire to look at his instrument; when doing this Welton called out that she had fainted away; Smith asked what Welton was going to do; he said he would go for Mallory; these two, Mallory and Welton, carried the girl off, and he (Smith) did not know whether she had come to or not; he did not know what happened afterwards; he supposed that they had gone to the buggy; Smith said he had burned the veil and knots; Welton went back on Tuesday and saw Smith; he asked Smith if there had been any inquiry regarding the girl; Smith said there had not been, and Smith then asked if he had been secured; Welton replied, "I think we have"; this happened on the road to Grafton.
